

November 28, 2011, At Last!

(Photo of man on motorbike)

Many concerns were hovering around the date of November 28, 2011, set by the Independent National Electoral Commission (INEC) for the presidential election and national legislative elections.

(Photo: man with large box on his head)

The propaganda was conducted briskly and everyone wanted to be seen using all sorts of tricks like dressing up taxi cyclists, the distribution of T-shirts, caps, display banners, portraits etc.. All this seasoned with good promises.

(Photo: Putting ballot into ballot box)

Clashes between supporters sometimes occurred. Then the 28th finally arrived. Citizens went to the polls to perform their civic duty.

(Photo: people waving papers)

There were several characters: the INEC officials, observers, witnesses, police, the fanatics of the candidates. Each with a specific mission and even with a very specific task to accomplish by all means for a candidate. Fortunately, both groups were monitored by each other with some deplorable overflow, but the election is over. To God be the glory. Now, compilation, counting and proclamation: will there be fraud?