

What Happened to “science” at the Michigan Science Center?

As a member of Michigan Science Center, I received a post card invitation to a new exhibit at the Detroit Science Center. It is called “1001 Innovations”. Last Sunday, I decided to take my grandchildren (6 and 9 years old) to see this exhibit and enjoy our afternoon. Our first stop at the Science Center was to see the Imax Theater movie about “beautiful earth”.

After the movie was over, I sat there for a minute thinking how to undo the unscientific propaganda promoted by U.S. government’s space agency, NASA.

The message in the movie was that man-made global warming is wrecking our environment, there is less and less oxygen available for the children to breathe and less water available for animals and people while the Arctic was melting and water in the Colorado River is disappearing. I managed to ease the children’s anxiety by telling them that people are not causing the end of the world and we walked over to visit the “1001 Inventions” exhibit.

I could not explain to the 6 and the 9 year old that all the man-made global warming conclusions were based on computer models and there is very little science to this man made global warming, just politics disguised as science

Next stop was to see the “1001 Innovations”. First, we were ushered into to a small theater to see a movie presentation. As the movie unfolded, I was stunned! Stunned as to what I heard as the main message of the movie. It went like this, “while the Europeans were being suffocated under the “dark ages” the Middle East and South East Asia was a boom in scientific innovations under the banner of the Muslim religion. It was clear from the movie and later I checked out the Michigan Science Center web site, that this exhibition was about promotion of a specific religion, Muslim religion. Yes, the movie promoted a “Muslim Civilization Period”.

The movie leaves no doubt in your mind that Muslim religion was a force for good where scientific inventions flourished under the directions of religious Mosques.

As the children and I moved about this exhibit, I kept thinking “what happened to separation of the church and state”. Michigan Science Center is a public institution receiving public funding. Certainly the schools in Michigan and across the US had to remove any symbols of Christianity, no more Christmas Nativity scenes in school or wearing a cross around your neck.

So, what happened to “science” at the Michigan Science Center? All we got that day was a good dose of liberal politics on man made global warming and promotion of one religion. The shocking question is why is our government promoting one religion over all other religions?
