The future for wildlife and backcountry explorers brightened recently, when 14,800 acres of private parcels became public, thanks to funding from real estate sales in southern Nevada, a generous willing seller, the BLM and determined conservationists.

The Home Camp parcels comprise mostly springs, wet meadows and streams in and around the Wall Canyon Wilderness Study Area, an hour northwest of Gerlach. This acquisition comes on the heels of a similar purchase of 17,000 acres in the Granite Range last year.

With these parcels now public and free from the threat of development, public access is ensured, and our volunteers can work with the BLM to enhance these critical oases. You can help. See pages 3 and 4.

Snow in the mountains hasn’t stopped Friends of Nevada Wilderness volunteers from healing wilderness on Mt. Charleston.

On March 7, 20 volunteers erased vehicle scars and restored habitat in Lovell Canyon.

“I feel really good that we did this,” said Pam Maranan. “Everyone needs to be more aware of the wild. We need to take care of it. We can’t take it for granted.”

“Even though we did a small part out here in nature, we made a big difference,” said Kevin Chong.

Good News for Sage Grouse

Senator Reid recently pledged $16 million to help Nevada’s sage-grouse, whose populations are struggling. Friends volunteers will be involved in projects soon.

Wild Contenders

Several efforts are underway in Nevada to help long-term protection of our wilderness resources. Friends works with a variety of stakeholders to conserve the important natural, cultural and recreational wonders these places hold. What we do today makes a difference for tomorrow.

SHELDON NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE. As the Sheldon prepares to release a draft management plan, Friends is working with groups from the Sierra Club to the Safari Club International to save the Sheldon from uranium mines, to restore wetlands and native plant communities, and identify areas for possible wilderness designation.

GOLD BUTTE. Public meetings are helping Clark County residents strike a balance between conservation and motorized activities in Nevada’s piece of the Grand Canyon puzzle.

BURBANK CANYONS. Douglas County (Minden and Gardnerville) is working to conserve their natural resources and rural quality of life legislatively. Friends is working with Douglas residents to give Burbank Canyons WSA the Congressional protection it deserves.

PINE FOREST RANGE. Folks in Humboldt County have long enjoyed the high lakes and cool forests of Alder Creek and Blue Lakes Wilderness Study Areas. Friends is working with Trout Unlimited and other fellow Nevadans to protect these fragile natural gems for everyone, forever.

If you live near these areas or know them well, call us at (775) 324-7667. You can make a difference!
After a long, cold winter, it’s time to get outside and join other great people to keep the wild in Nevada’s Wild West! Here are ways you can help. Call (775) 324-7667 for details.

SERVICE TRIPS
Explore wild Nevada, meet great people, and make a difference you can see and feel. See trips next page.

FIELD RESEARCH
Hike, camp and give back at the same time.

- With more than 30,000 acres of newly acquired lands in the Granite Range, Wall Canyon WSA and elsewhere in NW Nevada, the BLM needs volunteers to photograph and assess the health of 100s of springs and streams. Friends and the BLM will offer a free training at the Black Rock Rendezvous on Memorial Day weekend. Please RSVP.

- The Forest Service needs people to collect data about trailheads, visitor use and noxious weeds on Mt. Rose. Call for details.

WILDERNESS RANGERS
Revel in the towering cliffs and cool forests of Mt. Charleston, as you help the Forest Service keep the Spring Mountains wild and beautiful while sharing with visitors the wonders of Nevada’s wild heritage.

PUBLIC OUTREACH
Meet people and help wild places without leaving town. Help Friends staff information tables at upcoming events.

Pikas Love Volunteers!
Last year, 70 volunteers pulled fence, installed signs and restored habitat on the Sheldon National Wildlife Refuge. This year, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service leveraged those volunteer hours to receive funding to study pika on the Sheldon, helping to understand pika genetics and population resiliency in the face of climate change.
