Community Hubs link families from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds to services and support, learning opportunities and the wider community.

Logan Hubs are located in local primary schools that are already part of life for families and their children. For mothers, fathers and carers, accessing services and training is easier when delivered in settings that they know and use. For many preschool children their local Hub will be their first interaction with their future primary school. Being a part of a Hub helps them to feel at home in their local school environment and become more prepared to enter their first years of formal education.

“When parents first arrived they were afraid even to say hello. As they see our sincerity, and as relationships grow, they start to ask questions, open up, and ask for help.”

Community Hubs in Queensland are funded by the Australian Government Department of Social Services in partnership with the Scanlon Foundation, the Queensland State Government, and Community Hubs Australia.
