

Living the Change is a multi-faith global campaign which draws on our spiritual beliefs and values to inspire lifestyle choices which, together with the actions of others, will help limit global warming.

Each of our spiritual traditions offers teachings and values about living simply and caring for the vulnerable. Today, we know that climate disruption is hurting most those who are already vulnerable, and that Western greed is a large part of the problem. Consumerism tells us we never have “enough”.

Living the Change calls on people of faith to lead in a global effort to re-set what is regarded as enough. We want to promote lifestyles of gratitude for life’s blessings, lifestyles of care for our impacts on the earth and all who depend on it.

We will encourage pledges to reduce our impacts, in the areas of:

- Eating less meat
- Using car & air travel less
- Energy efficiency & using clean energy

We will then add up the carbon emissions avoided and together celebrate our collective achievements at special interfaith gatherings in October.

Leaders of faith are encouraged to promote voluntary actions within their own faith communities. A pledge mechanism and other resources will progressively be made available on the ARRCC website over the coming months. To learn more, see https://www.arrcc.org.au/living_the_change
