

The Case for a Guaranteed Income

Lifting People from Poverty: Fairly, Efficiently, & Effectively

The Canadian Welfare System vs Guaranteed Livable Income (GLI)

Canada's current welfare system is complex, intrusive, and inefficient. And inadequate benefit levels trap people in poverty.

A Guaranteed Livable Income would automatically top up the incomes of people living in poverty using direct, automatic payments via the existing tax system.

Mary's only option is to apply for welfare.

Mary is a single mother of a young boy. She lost her job last year, has been unable to find work, and has used up all of her Employment Insurance.

A GLI would provide her with a far better option than welfare.

Onerous Criteria vs Minimal Criteria

Before qualifying for welfare, Mary must be completely destitute. She has to liquidate most of her assets, including her vehicle and savings.

If Mary falls on hard times, a GLI would help her temporarily weather the storm with an automatic income top-up while keeping the productive assets needed to leave – and stay off – social assistance.

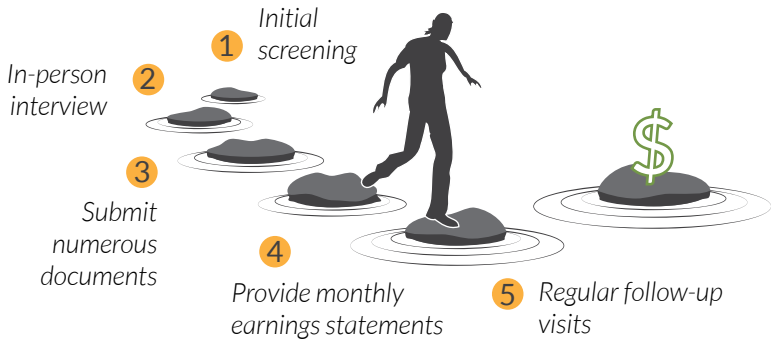

- assets a GLI recipient would be able to keep while still qualifying for assistance
- house
  - RRSPs & other savings
  - vehicle

Burdensome Administration vs Administered through Tax System

To keep her benefits, Mary has to report regularly in person to a caseworker. She's required to continuously justify her need for social assistance while proving she's looking for work.

Because a GLI would be administered through the tax system, there would be no need for the bureaucracy that oversees the current welfare system. No application, no ongoing monitoring: Mary simply has to fill out a tax return.

Steps required to receive GLI assistance:

With the complex criteria for qualifying and ongoing monitoring, the system to administer welfare saps an incredible amount of time and resources.

Disincentives to Work vs Incentives to Work

Mary found a part-time job. But because she's earning extra income, her benefits get clawed back significantly.

A GLI encourages Mary to work by giving her the security of an income guarantee – without fear of being worse off by working. She would pay regular tax rates for all income above the poverty line.

In nearly half of poor households in Canada, at least one person has a job.

Getting off of welfare can be extremely difficult. Extra income can mean cuts to:

- social assistance benefits
- subsidized housing
- prescription drugs

And it leads to work-related costs like:

- payroll taxes
- transportation costs
- childcare

A GLI would allow people to look for better jobs or upgrade their education and training.

A GLI would recognize the significant contributions of those not in the labour force, but whose work still brings economic and social value.

Compared to not working at all, people are often worse off accepting low-paying employment.

And for those unable to work or to find work, a GLI would provide a more dignified life.

Inadequate Rates vs Enough to Live

Mary's social assistance isn't enough to provide for her and her son. She's forced to choose between basic necessities.

With a GLI, Mary's income would be enough to ensure she and her son don't have to live below the poverty line. She'd be able to meet her basic needs and those of her son.

No matter how poverty is measured, there's no denying that welfare rates don't come close to meeting basic needs.

$1,858 per month Amount per month needed for a single person and child to live at the poverty line ($23,498/yr.)

- $1,050.00 rent + utilities (2 bdrm.)
- $400.00 food
- $120.00 public transport
- $50.00 clothing/personal care
- $238.00 remaining for other basic necessities

$1,858 per month is still not much, especially in a larger urban centre, but it's at least enough to ensure an adult and child can get by.

Ineffective vs Effective

Welfare traps millions of people in poverty and takes a significant social and economic toll on society as a whole.

A Guaranteed Livable Income would effectively eliminate poverty, while significantly reducing its many health and social costs.

And putting more income in the pockets of low income earners, who spend their money on necessities, will boost local economies.
