“Tackling climate change could be the greatest global health opportunity of the 21st century.”

— The Lancet

The Climate and Health Alliance (CAHA) is Australia’s national peak body on climate and health.

CAHA is a coalition of 40 health and medical groups, academic and research institutions, health care service providers and unions.

CAHA’s mission is to build a powerful health sector movement for climate action.

The health sector is Australia’s largest employer, and health professionals are the most trusted members of our community. By working together, the health sector can lead action on climate to protect our health.

What we do

CAHA brings the health sector together to act on climate and health by:

- advocating for action at all levels of government;
- developing policy and translating research;
- leading persuasive communications;
- training health professionals to be powerful and effective advocates;
- supporting the health sector to cut emissions and build climate resilience; and
- participating in international efforts for global action.

The health impacts of climate change and why calls for action are growing louder

Key achievements

Driving the sector-wide Our Climate Our Health campaign, including:

- Spearheading a national consultation to develop the world-leading Framework for a National Strategy on Climate, Health and Well-being, endorsed by over 50 health, social welfare and conservation groups.
- Winning support from ALP, the Greens and key independent MPs for a National Strategy; and
- Shaping the narrative on climate and health through coordinating a Joint Statement with 28 health groups declaring the air pollution from the bushfires in NSW a public health emergency.

Leading the development of the Queensland government’s Health and Wellbeing Climate Change Adaptation Plan.

Establishing the Pacific network of the Global Green and Healthy Hospitals, supporting members representing more than 1,700 hospitals and healthcare providers across Australia & NZ to reduce emissions and environmental footprint.

"The Climate and Health Alliance's strategic leadership has been critical in elevating policy discussions about the health risks associated with climate change.

At the Australian Healthcare and Hospitals Association, we value the opportunity to work with CAHA to make a difference to the world we live in, and to the health of our community."

Alison Verhoeven, Chief Executive of the Australian Healthcare and Hospitals Association
