

1 MacArthur Park

7th St and Alvarado St

The MacArthur Park hub itself sports a beautiful urban park, with scattered memorials (including one to the eponymous General MacArthur), sculptures, recreation centers, a fountain, and a massive lake fed by natural springs. It's also home to Levitt Pavilion, the public space that hosts 50 free outdoor concerts every year.

2 The Spring Arcade

541 S Spring St

The Spring Arcade, publicized as a "city within a city" when it opened in 1925, is now a dining destination with restaurants like the Cantonese BBQ spot Rice Box and Boyle Heights taco chain Guisados.

3 Biddy Mason Memorial Park

333 S Spring St

This monument is full of artwork, inscriptions, and embedded objects that tell the remarkable story of a former slave whose generosity helped shape early Los Angeles.

4 Los Angeles City Hall

200 N Spring St

Towering at 32 floors is the 91-year-old center of LA government. Fun fact: The concrete in its tower was made with sand from each of California's 58 counties and water from its 21 historic missions.

5 Hall of Justice

211 W Temple St

The Hall of Justice is the oldest surviving government building in the LA Civic Center. In front (visible just down Temple Street) is Embodied, a bronze statue described by artist Alison Saar as a "figure of grace and virtue to represent the spirit of justice."

6 Los Angeles State Historic Park

1245 N Spring St

A block off the route, this 34-acre open space is filled with orange trees, native plants, and intersecting run/walk trails. Check out A Park is Made by People by Artist Rosten Woo, an audio tour and set of signs that tell the 20-year story of how this park came to be.

7 Japanese American National Museum (JANM)

100 N Central Ave

JANM covers 130 years of Japanese American history. In front sits Oomo Cube, a Rubik's Cube sculpture with photographic panels and internal lighting. Artist Nicole Maloney used the OOMO shorthand for "Out of Many, One." On October 6, the museum is hosting its free 11th Annual Kokoro Craft Boutique.

8 4th Street Viaduct

This art deco bridge was designed by longtime LA City Engineer Merrill Butler and built in 1931. Stop at the top for an open view of the Los Angeles skyline.

9 Boyle Hotel

1781 E 1st St

The Victorian-era, Queen Anne style Boyle Hotel is a cultural landmark that has transformed into an affordable housing building. It was built the same year the Los Angeles streetcar went into service; now it sits across from the Mariachi Plaza Metro station.

Welcome to the 33rd CicLAvia where we celebrate, as one big community, UCLA's 100 years! UCLA100 showcases all the special things that make Los Angeles a vibrant global city—its diversity, its innovation, its inclusiveness, and its dedication to finding ways of improving our quality of life.

While we play, ride, walk, run, and simply enjoy our streets, we will also have an opportunity to appreciate our city's built and social environment. This CicLAvia will showcase some of the city's most historic and vibrant neighborhoods—Downtown, Chinatown, Westlake, MacArthur Park, Little Tokyo, Arts District, and Boyle Heights.

Enjoy the day.
