Executive Summary

Study description: This study reports on the findings of an EKOS national on-line survey of 1,000 Canadians conducted between January 25 to February 2, 2017, which explored Canadians’ views on whether it is reasonable for our government to impose sanctions on Israel and for civil society to organize boycotts to pressure Israel to respect international law. This report addresses four other questions in addition to those analyzed in Part 1: “Disconnect: Canadians’ views of the Israeli government vs. Canadian government policy toward Israel and Palestine.”

We found that Canadians’ views are far more in line with those of the international community than with those of their own government. Canadians consider both sanctions on Israel and the Palestinian call for boycott to be reasonable measures to ensure Israel’s respect for international law. And Canadians generally oppose Parliament’s condemnation of those who advocate for such boycotts. These results contrast starkly with the Canadian government’s policy of uncritical support for Israel, and its hostility toward those who advocate for justice for the Palestinian people.

Over 91% of Canadians agree that sanctions are a “reasonable” means of censuring countries for international law or human rights violations.

Two-thirds (66%) of Canadians think sanctions specifically on Israel are a “reasonable” means of ensuring its respect for international law. Aside from Conservatives, three-quarters or more of all other political party supporters agreed that sanctions on Israel would be reasonable, ranging from Liberals at 75% to the Bloc Québécois at 94%. Only 30% of Conservative Party supporters agreed that sanctions on Israel would be reasonable – a figure that is nonetheless striking, in light of the Conservative Party’s refusal to utter any criticism of Israel.

Over three-quarters (78%) of Canadians consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott on Israel to be “reasonable.” Across age, ethnicity, religion, education, gender, and region over half of respondents in all categories agreed that the Palestinians’ call for boycott is reasonable. Strong majorities of all political parties except the Conservative Party thought the Palestinian call for a boycott was reasonable (88% to 94%). Remarkably, Conservatives were almost equally split on whether or not they considered a boycott reasonable (49% yes, 51% no).

Most Canadians (55%) oppose Parliament’s condemnation of Canadians who promote the Palestinian call for boycotts of Israel. Twice as many opposed as supported (26%) such a condemnation. Of those who expressed an opinion, more Conservatives supported (46%) than opposed (33%) the motion to condemn BDS advocates. Between 55% and 78% of supporters of all other political parties opposed the motion and only between 13% and 22% supported it.

Survey of Canadian Attitudes on Israel-Palestine

Most Canadians Say Sanctions and Boycott are Reasonable Measures to Defend Palestinian Rights

Introduction

In this report, we release Part 2 of the results of a poll of Canadian attitudes on Israel/Palestine conducted by EKOS Research Associates. Before moving to a discussion of the new results, we provide below a summary of the findings of Part 1 of the survey.

Summary of results of Part 1

On February 16, 2017, we released Part 1 of the results of a national survey of Canadians about their views on the Israel/Palestine conflict. We found that, of those who had an opinion:

1. Far more view the Israeli government negatively (46%) than positively (28%);
2. Far more see the Canadian government as pro-Israel (61%) than as pro-Palestinian (16%);
3. The plurality of Canadians view the media as unbiased (45%), but of those who perceive a bias, substantially more see the media as pro-Israel (34%) than as pro-Palestinian (21%).
4. Most significantly, almost all (91%) believe that criticism of the Israeli government is like that of any other country, and is not necessarily anti-Semitic.

These results showed a clear distinction between Conservative party supporters on the one hand and supporters of the Liberal, NDP, Green and Bloc Québécois parties on the other hand. Most Conservatives view Israel positively (58%). Far more than other parties, many Conservatives view the Canadian Government (36%) and the media (34%) as pro-Palestinian, and believe criticism of the Israeli government is anti-Semitic (20%). But high proportions of Conservatives, and in some cases, the majority, disagreed with those positions.

Supporters of the Liberal, NDP, Green and Bloc Québécois parties, on the other hand, were far more likely than Conservatives to hold negative opinions of the Israeli government (ranging from 55% to 78%), to perceive the Canadian government to be biased toward Israel (ranging from 70% to 77%), and to view the media as biased toward Israel (ranging from 36% to 43%).

In summary, Part 1 of the survey demonstrated a serious disconnect between the opinions of Canadians and the long-standing policies of our government.

Part 2: How do Canadians view sanctions and boycotts of Israel?

In Part 2, we wanted to explore what proportion of Canadians think it is reasonable for our government and civil society to pressure Israel to comply with international law. We felt it was pertinent to assess Canadians’ attitudes on these points, as recent years have seen important developments on this and related issues.
First, the Obama administration was unable to advance peace negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians. Most gallingly, during these attempts to restart negotiations, Israel insisted on continuing its illegal colonization of Palestinian territory. Israel’s refusal to even slow its “settlement” expansion plans during negotiations created great international ire and frustration with Israel’s leadership, especially in Europe.

In parallel, the Palestinian leadership sought to enhance its status at the UN, and was awarded Non-Member Observer State status at an overwhelming (138-9) General Assembly vote¹ in November 2012. Nevertheless, their application for full state status was blocked by the US in the Security Council two years later. ² In response to international impatience with Israeli intransigence, and rising support for an independent Palestinian state, international grassroots efforts to pressure Israel economically to respect the rights of Palestinians has grown.

Even though Canada currently imposes sanctions on 21 other countries, no Canadian Government has ever seriously raised the possibility that Canada would impose sanctions on Israel. On the contrary, the Canadian Government has frequently pledged virtually unqualified support for Israel. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau’s predecessor, Stephen Harper, repeatedly refused to criticize Israel. Harper called Israel “a light of freedom and democracy in what is otherwise a region of darkness” and pledged that Israel “will always have Canada as a friend.”³

Little has changed under the Trudeau Government. Canada’s votes on a series of annual UN resolutions relating to Israel and Palestine remained unchanged from Harper to Trudeau. As Ron Csillag of the Canadian Jewish News wrote in 2015, soon after Justin Trudeau took office, “Canada’s votes were unchanged from last year, continuing a more Israel-friendly shift at the UN that began with former Liberal prime minister Paul Martin and continued under former Conservative prime minister Stephen Harper.”⁴

Within weeks of taking office in late 2015, the Trudeau Government voted against 17 United Nations resolutions that were critical of Israel or that were supportive of Palestinian rights.⁵

⁵See Appendix 1 hereto.
One year later, the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 2334 which declared Israeli settlements a “flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of...peace.” It is significant that the Trudeau Government issued no official response, even though the United States abstained, and all other Security Council members supported it, including Canada’s allies France, the United Kingdom, and New Zealand.

On February 3, 2017, in a stunning show of contempt for Resolution 2334, Israel’s Knesset passed a “Settlement Regulation” Law to retroactively legitimize dozens of wildcat settlements under Israeli law. This sparked almost unanimous international condemnation. But the Trudeau Government didn’t comment until long after its allies, and even then, it admonished Israel meekly with a statement virtually identical to Donald Trump’s comment that settlements “may not be helpful” to achieving Israel-Palestinian peace.

In addition, the Trudeau government and previous Canadian governments have condemned and attacked Canadians who advocate for the 2005 Palestinian call for international boycotts, divestment and sanctions, a movement which seeks to pressure Israel economically to end its violations of Palestinian human rights. Many prominent Parliamentarians have characterized as “anti-Semitic” criticism of Israeli Government’s oppressive policies toward Palestinians. For example, on March 13, 2015, Justin Trudeau tweeted: “The BDS movement, like Israeli Apartheid Week, has no place on Canadian campuses.” And in 2016, Jason Kenney, a former Conservative cabinet minister, claimed “the BDS movement represents a new wave of anti-Semitism, the most pernicious form of hatred in the history of humanity.”

9 On July 9, 2005, over 170 Palestinian civil society organizations issued the following call: “We, representatives of Palestinian civil society, call upon international civil society organizations and people of conscience all over the world to impose broad boycotts and implement divestment initiatives against Israel similar to those applied to South Africa in the apartheid era. We appeal to you to pressure your respective states to impose embargoes and sanctions against Israel. We also invite conscientious Israelis to support this Call, for the sake of justice and genuine peace. These non-violent punitive measures should be maintained until Israel meets its obligation to recognize the Palestinian people’s inalienable right to self-determination and fully complies with the precepts of international law by: 1. Ending its occupation and colonization of all Arab lands and dismantling the Wall; 2. Recognizing the fundamental rights of the Arab-Palestinian citizens of Israel to full equality; and 3. Respecting, protecting and promoting the rights of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes and properties as stipulated in UN resolution 194.” https://bdsmovement.net/call.
In February 2016, the Conservative MP, Tony Clement moved:

That, given Canada and Israel share a long history of friendship as well as economic and diplomatic relations, the House reject the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) movement, which promotes the demonization and delegitimization of the State of Israel, and call upon the government to condemn any and all attempts by Canadian organizations, groups or individuals to promote the BDS movement, both here at home and abroad. 12

Although the NDP and Green Party of Canada said they opposed the BDS movement, 13 they refused to support Clement’s motion because, as NDP Foreign Affairs critic, Hélène Laverdière, said: “Just because we do not support it [BDS] does not mean that the House can condemn people who peacefully support another idea. …We will find a solution through informed debate and engagement, not by condemning people or disrupting dialogue.” 14

Only Quebec’s separatist party, the Bloc Québécois, argued in Canada’s Parliament that the BDS campaign constitutes legitimate criticism of Israeli policies. 15

Ultimately, the Liberals supported the Conservative condemnation motion, and it passed by a vote of 229-51, in spite of opposition by the NDP, 16 Greens, 17 Bloc Québécois, and several

13 On February 7, 2017, the Green Party of Canada announced overwhelming ratification of a resolution which endorses the main objectives and tactics of the BDS movement, including boycotts, divestment, and sanctions against Israel, thereby becoming the first and only party in Canada’s Parliament to call for sanctions on Israel. https://www.greenparty.ca/en/sgm-2016/voting/resolutions/s16-p013
16 The NDP opposed the motion on the basis of the Charter right to freedom of expression.
17 Leader (and sole MP) for the Green Party Elizabeth May was absent for the vote, but expressed disagreement with the vote on the basis of freedom of expression.
Liberal MPs. While the motion has no legislative force, it moves Canada’s government officially into the anti-BDS camp.

The French government illustrates the dangers posed by such condemnations. France has gone further than simply condemning proponents of Israeli boycotts; it has criminalized them. The French Court of Cassation, France’s court of final appeal, recently upheld the 2009 criminal convictions of 12 BDS activists, involving imprisonment or a fine of up to $50,000. As journalist Benjamin Dodman points out, “What BDS activists regarded as political statements denouncing Israel’s violations of international law could be – and indeed were – treated by French courts as an ‘incitement’ to hatred.”

The Canadian government does not have to take that road. On the contrary, and as this survey demonstrates, the Canadian government ought to refrain from demonizing BDS supporters if it truly aspires to represent the views of Canadians.

In contrast to the hyperbolic attacks on BDS advocates by Canadian Liberal and Conservative parties and the French government, the European Union both supports modest actions against Israel and defends the right of citizens to advocate boycotts of Israel. In April 2015, at least 16 European Foreign Ministers denounced the “expansion of Israeli illegal settlements in the Occupied Territories,” and they demanded that “any imported goods originating in the settlements be distinctly labeled.” On October 31, 2016, Federica Mogherini, EU High Representative for Foreign Affairs announced: “The EU stands firm in protecting freedom of expression and freedom of association in line with the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, which is applicable on EU Member States’ territory, including with regard to BDS actions carried out on this territory.”

In Part 1 of this study, we demonstrated that Canadians tend to have a negative view of the Israeli Government and that over 90% of them do not consider criticism of the Israeli Government to be anti-Semitic. We also sought to determine what Canadians think about concrete actions the Canadian Government could take, such as imposing sanctions on Israel, and allowing citizen boycotts of Israel? We also asked how Canadians view Parliament’s motion condemning BDS activists.

We are not aware of other published surveys which asked Canadians these or similar questions. However, one recent United States study found that support for imposing sanctions on Israel is rising there as well as in Europe, especially among Democrats. More particularly, it found that, “over the past year, support for imposing economic sanctions and taking more serious measures [against Israel] has gone up overall. In November 2015, 37% of Americans supported this compared to 46% November 2016. ...In November 2016, a majority of Democrats (60%) supported imposing some economic sanctions or taking even more serious action compared with 49% in November 2015. Looking at Republicans over these years, 31% supported imposing sanctions and taking even more serious actions in November 2016 and 26% supported this in November 2015.”

We asked EKOS to conduct a survey which explored attitudes around the following issues:

1. Whether Canadians think sanctions are a reasonable way for Canada to censure countries for violations of international law;
2. Whether Canadians think it would be reasonable for the Canadian Government to impose some sort of sanctions specifically on Israel;
3. Whether Canadians consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott to be reasonable;
4. Whether Canadians support or oppose Parliament’s motion to condemn groups and individuals who promote the Palestinian boycott call.

This report presents the striking answers to these survey questions. Notably, we found that Canadians’ views are far more in line with those of the international community than with those of their own government. Also, the survey showed that Canadians consider both sanctions on Israel and the Palestinian call for boycott to be reasonable measures to ensure Israel’s respect for international law. Finally, the results demonstrate that Canadians generally oppose Parliament’s condemnation of those who advocate for such boycotts. These results contrast starkly with the Canadian government’s policy of uncritical support for Israel, and its hostility toward those who advocate for justice for the Palestinian people.

Methodology

Part 2 reports respondents’ replies to the follow four specific questions:

1. Canada currently imposes economic and political sanctions on 21 countries due to their serious violations of international law and/or human rights abuses. Do you think sanctions are a reasonable way for Canada to censure countries for violations of international law or human rights?

2. In December 2016, the United Nations Security Council voted 14-0 (with the United States abstaining) to declare that the Israeli settlements on Palestinian territory were a “...flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of [...] peace" between Israel and Palestine. Given this statement by the U.N Security Council, do you believe that some sort of Canadian government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable?

3. In 2004, the International Court of Justice ruled unanimously that Israel’s settlements on Palestinian territory violate international law. In response, one year later, over 170 Palestinian citizen’s organizations called for a boycott to ensure Israel’s respect for international law. Do you consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott to be reasonable?

4. In February, 2016, Canada’s Parliament adopted a motion (by a vote of 229-51) to condemn Canadian individuals and organizations who promote the Palestinian call for a boycott to pressure Israel to respect international law. Do you support or oppose Parliament condemning Canadian individuals and organizations who promote the Palestinian call for such a boycott?

EKOS Research Associates (EKOS), an experienced public opinion research firm, conducted the on-line poll with the above questions and those reported in Part 1. EKOS is a full-service consulting practice, founded in 1980, which has evolved to become one of the leading suppliers of evaluation and public opinion research for the Canadian government.

Between January 25 and February 2, 2017, a random sample of 1,000 Canadian adults aged 18 and over from EKOS’ online/telephone research panel, Probit, completed the survey. The survey was made available to all respondents in either English or French. The margin of error associated with the sample is plus or minus 3.1 percentage points, 19 times out of 20. The margin of error increases when the results are sub-divided.

EKOS statistically weighted all the data by age, gender, education and region to ensure that the sample’s composition reflects that of the actual population of Canada, based on census data. EKOS weighted the data based on the 2011 Census, for age, gender and region, and on the 2011 National Household Survey (NHS) for education. The NHS replaced the long form census in 2011.

All tables in the body of this report are reported as percentages of respondents who expressed an opinion. Those who did not reply or checked “don’t know” are not included in these tables. The full data, including those who did not reply or who replied “don’t know,” can be found online at:

A higher percentage of respondents checked “don’t know” or did not reply to the questions explored in this report than in Part 1: Disconnect. On question 1 (about sanctions in general), 14% did not reply. On question 2 (about whether sanctions on Israel would be reasonable), 22% did not reply. On question 3 (about whether boycotts of Israel are reasonable), 21% did not reply. And on question 4 (about support or opposition to condemning those who promote such a boycott), 15% did not reply.

The highest proportions of respondents who did not reply or checked “don’t know” were found in:

- Those with high school or less education
- Aboriginal people
- Residents of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec
- Catholics
- Bloc Québécois

The lowest proportions of non-respondents were found in:

- Those with bachelors or post-graduate degrees
- Residents of British Columbia
- NDP and Green party supporters
- Muslim, Jewish, and other non-Christian religions.

This suggests that questions in Part 2 may have required more knowledge about and interest in the Israel/Palestine conflict, and perhaps also more general awareness of Canadian policies and world affairs, than those we analyzed in Part 1.

Readers may be particularly interested in the views of Jewish respondents. Unlike other demographic categories, people may identify as “Jewish” both as an ethnicity and as a religion. As in Part 1, the EKOS sample included 26 respondents who checked “Jewish” as their ethnic identity and 18 who checked “Jewish” as their religion. The data do not allow us to infer to what degree these individuals overlap, but it is most likely that the latter is a sub-set of the former, because the differing responses of religious vs. secular Jews to similar questions asked in a survey of British Jews echoed those of this study. Because their responses differed, we have reported both. The total number of Jewish respondents is so low because Jews only constitute about 1.1% of the Canadian population. The level of confidence in generalizing from these small numbers is relatively low, compared to categories with more respondents. However, because the sample was randomly selected, these results are still likely to reflect those of the broader Canadian Jewish population.\textsuperscript{25}

\textsuperscript{25} The margin of error in generalizing from a sample this small was between 19% and 23%, compared to the overall study’s 3.1% margin of error. That means that between 77% and 81% of potential samples taken from this population would find results close to those of the actual population.
Results

We summarize here the responses to each of the four questions. Detailed tables for each question, sorted by demographic variables can be found in Appendix 2. Raw data both including and excluding non-respondents can be found here: https://d3n8a8pro7vhmx.cloudfront.net/cjpme/pages/2537/attachments/original/1488332830/EKOS_02717_tables_including_residuals.pdf?1488332830

1. Canadians overwhelmingly agree that sanctions are a “reasonable” means of censuring countries for violations of international law or of human rights

The survey question posed to respondents was, “Canada currently imposes economic and political sanctions on 21 countries due to their serious violations of international law and/or human rights abuses. Do you think sanctions are a reasonable way for Canada to censure countries for violations of international law or human rights?”

Chart 1: Do you think sanctions are a reasonable way for Canada to censure countries?
Of those with an opinion on this question, the response was overwhelmingly “yes.” This held true across political party support (84% to 95% yes), religion (87% to 100% yes), ethnicity (88% to 96% yes), education (90%-95% yes) and region (89% to 94% yes).
2. Most Canadians think sanctions on Israel are a “reasonable” means of pressuring it to respect international law

The survey question posed to respondents was, “In December 2016, the United Nations Security Council voted 14-0 (with the United States abstaining) to declare that the Israeli settlements on Palestinian territory were a “…flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of […] peace” between Israel and Palestine. Given this statement by the U.N Security Council, do you believe that some sort of Canadian government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable?”

Chart 2: Do you believe that some sort of Canadian government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable?

Given the UN Security Council’s condemnation of illegal Israeli settlements on Palestinian territory, a strong majority of Canadians believe that government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable.

When asked specifically whether they believe that Canadian government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable, 66% said “yes.” Interestingly, this was an important drop overall from the previous question, where 91% of respondents felt that sanctions were a reasonable way to censure countries which violate international law. Clearly, citing Israel specifically for sanctions caused a change in reaction among the survey respondents. When Israel was specified, however, by far the largest drop in support for government sanctions occurred among

Supporters of the Conservative Party (from 93% to 30%). (It is nonetheless remarkable that, even among Conservatives, almost one in three (30%) consider sanctions on Israel reasonable.) When Israel was specified, the drop in support for sanctions was far more modest among supporters of the other parties. For example, among Liberals, support fell from 95% to 75%, and among NDP supporters, support for sanctions fell negligibly (from 85% to 84%). Moreover, even with this drop, two-thirds of Canadians still support sanctions on Israel, almost twice as many as those opposing sanctions on Israel. This result provides a strong mandate for the Canadian Government to impose sanctions on Israel.

Aside from Conservatives, three-quarters or more of all other political party supporters agreed that sanctions on Israel would be reasonable, ranging from Liberals at 75% to the Bloc Québécois at 90%. This is consistent with results in our first report, in which Conservatives were far more likely than any other political party supporters to have a positive view of the Israeli government (58% vs. 28% for all respondents) and to view criticism of the Israeli government as anti-Semitic (20% vs. 9% overall).

Those who were less likely to consider it reasonable for the Canadian government to sanction Israel were: Conservatives (30%), people who identified their religion as “Jewish” (36%) and Prairie residents (49%).

In all other categories, the majority considered it reasonable for the Canadian government to impose “some sort of sanctions on Israel.” Interestingly, that included those who identified their ethnicity as “Jewish” (51%). This is very surprising, given the heavy pro-Israel views of prominent Jewish organizations. By comparison, in a 2015 survey of British Jews, overall 24% would be prepared “to support some sanctions against Israel if I thought they would encourage the Israeli government to engage in the peace process.” But that percentage rose to 40% of non-observant Jews and 41% of Jews under 30 years old.26

Among those who expressed an opinion, those most likely to consider sanctions on Israel reasonable were residents of Québec (78%) and the Atlantic Provinces (70%), women (70%), those aged between 18 and 34 (70%) and those aged 55-64 (70%), those with Bachelor degrees (79%), Muslims (76%), Christians who were not Catholic or Protestants (75%), non-religious people (75%) and those who consider their ethnic identity to be “French” (88%).

These results dramatically contradict the taken-for-granted assumption by many political leaders that Canadians generally would oppose sanctions on Israel. On the contrary, this survey strongly suggests that Green, NDP, Liberal, and Bloc Québécois parties stand to gain voter support if they endorse sanctions on Israel.

3. Over 75% of Canadians consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott on Israel to be “reasonable”

The survey question posed to respondents was, “In 2004, the International Court of Justice ruled unanimously that Israel’s settlements on Palestinian territory violate international law. In response, one year later, over 170 Palestinian citizen’s organizations called for a boycott to ensure Israel’s respect for international law. Do you consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott to be reasonable?”

Chart 3: Do you consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott to be reasonable?

We found overwhelming support for the Palestinian call for boycotts of Israel. Of those who expressed an opinion, over three-quarters (78%) said they “consider the Palestinians’ call for boycott [of Israel] to be reasonable.” Across age, ethnicity, religion, education, gender, and region over half of respondents in all categories (of those who expressed an opinion) agreed that the Palestinians’ call for boycott is reasonable.
Strong majorities of all but supporters of the Conservative Party thought the Palestinian call for a boycott was reasonable (88% to 94%). Remarkably, Conservatives were almost equally split on whether or not they considered a boycott reasonable (49% yes, 51% no).

This survey strongly suggests that Liberal, NDP, Green, and Bloc Québécois parties would better reflect the views of their constituents if they supported the Palestinian call for BDS. The survey results suggest that even Conservative Party support for BDS would not negatively affect its overall level of support among Canadian voters.

Surprisingly, support for the Palestinian call for boycotts is high even among Jewish respondents, including 82% of people who identified their ethnicity as “Jewish” and 57% of those who identified their religion as “Jewish”. This completely contradicts the messages of the Center for Israel and Jewish Affairs and other pro-Israel lobbies, which portray the BDS call as anti-Semitic.
4. Most Canadians oppose Parliament’s condemnation of Canadians who promote the Palestinian call for boycotts of Israel

The survey question posed to respondents was, “In February 2016, Canada’s Parliament adopted a motion (by a vote of 229-51) to condemn Canadian individuals and organizations who promote the Palestinian call for a boycott to pressure Israel to respect international law. Do you support or oppose Parliament condemning Canadian individuals and organizations who promote the Palestinian call for such a boycott?”

Chart 4: Do you support Parliament condemning Canadians who promote a boycott of Israel?

Far more Canadians oppose than support Parliament’s February, 2016 decision to condemn individuals and groups who promote the Palestinian call for a boycott of Israel

Of those who expressed an opinion, a majority (53%) opposed condemning Canadian individuals and organizations who promote the Palestinian call for a boycott of Israel. Twice as many opposed as supported (26%) such a condemnation.
Again, we found a sharp divide between the opinions of Conservative Party supporters and the supporters of all other political parties. Of those who expressed an opinion, more Conservatives supported (46%) than opposed (33%) the motion to condemn BDS advocates. This was the opposite of supporters of all other political parties: between 55% and 78% of those respondents opposed the motion and only between 13% and 22% supported it. This suggests that the government’s condemnation of those who advocate BDS is strongly out of line with public opinion, especially among Liberal, NDP, Green, and Bloc Québécois supporters.

Those most opposed to Parliament condemning advocates for boycott campaigns included: people under 35 (65%), non-religious respondents (65%), Catholics (53%), non-Judeo-Christians (52%), people with a Bachelors (62%) or post-graduate degrees (65%), and British Columbia residents (65%).

In all ethnic categories, a majority of respondents also opposed the motion, including, significantly, 72% of Jews. People who identified their religion as “Jewish” were almost evenly split on whether they support (41%) or oppose (52%) the motion. We can infer that Jews, like most other Canadians, value free speech, and do not want their government infringing on the right of citizens to advocate for non-violent measures to promote justice.

Analysis of results and implications

Overview

The combined survey results expose a massive divide between Canadian public opinion and the staunchly pro-Israel policies of a government that is supposed to represent Canadians.

Part 1 of the survey results showed that, although the Harper and Trudeau governments have given lavish and unqualified support to Israel’s government, Canadians tend to view the Israeli Government negatively and to consider criticism of the Israeli government like that of any other country, and not necessarily anti-Semitic. As presented above, Part 2 of the survey now shows that Canadians also tend to believe that both sanctions on Israel and the Palestinians’ call for a boycott are reasonable measures to bring an end to Israel’s long-standing and flagrant violations of international law. The Part 2 survey results also show that most Canadians oppose Liberal/Conservative efforts to condemn those who endorse the BDS movement.

Further, the survey results revealed a major difference between Conservative respondents and the supporters of all other federal political parties. As shown in Part 1 of the survey results, compared to other parties, Conservatives tended to have a more positive attitude toward the Israeli Government, and to be more likely to view the Canadian Government and the media as pro-Palestinian, to view criticism of Israeli government policies as anti-Semitic, and to be opposed to sanctions on Israel and to Palestinians’ call for a boycott. However, even among Conservative Party supporters, a large proportion, and in some cases even a majority, did not endorse those views.

The survey makes it abundantly clear that supporters of the governing Liberal Party do not hold particularly pro-Israel positions. Yet Justin Trudeau’s government seems as inclined to support Israel as Stephen Harper’s government, no matter how egregious Israel’s violations of international law.

Israel, Sanctions and the Canadian Government’s Double Standard

In the first all-party leaders’ debate in Canada’s 2015 federal election, Stephen Harper, arguably the most pro-Israel Prime Minister in Canadian history, challenged Justin Trudeau to clarify his attitude toward Israel. Harper asserted that “there is a movement at the United Nations to isolate and denigrate the state of Israel... The best friend and ally this country has is in a very dangerous region, and we will never go along with that anti-Israel position.” Justin Trudeau responded perfunctorily to Harper’s challenge by stating simply that “All parties are in agreement on this.”

Since taking office in late 2015, the Trudeau government has left no doubt as to its agreement with Stephen Harper’s staunch support of Israel. Within weeks of taking office, the Trudeau government voted on dozens of occasions against United Nations resolutions that were critical of Israel or supportive of Palestinian rights. In 2016, the Trudeau government extended its ‘unblemished’ record of support for Israel at the U.N. The Trudeau government has yet to vote in favour of a U.N. resolution that is critical of Israel or supportive of Palestinian rights. The U.N. resolutions that the Trudeau government has opposed or refused to support in 2015 and 2016 are reviewed in detail in Appendix 1 hereto.

As Appendix 1 makes clear, since its election in October 2015, the Trudeau government has found itself on the losing end of dozens of highly lopsided votes at the UN which relate to Israel or the Palestinians. Typically, the only countries joining Canada in these votes were Israel, the United States and a handful of tiny states, usually including Micronesia, Palau and the Marshall Islands.

So extreme is the Trudeau government’s support of Israel that it opposed a U.N. resolution that “reaffirms the importance of Israel’s accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons [NPT] and placement of all its nuclear facilities under comprehensive International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, in realizing the goal of universal adherence to the Treaty in the Middle East.” 31 Israel is the only state in the Middle East that possesses a nuclear arsenal, it is also the only state in the Middle East that has not acceded to the NPT. On the Canadian government’s Global Affairs website, it is stated that the NPT “is fundamental to Canada’s nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation policy.” The NPT, ratified by 189 countries, is one of the most broadly-supported treaties in history. Only Israel, India and Pakistan have yet to adhere to it. 32 Despite Canada’s ringing statement of support for the NPT, the Trudeau government was unfathomably opposed to a U.N. resolution that simply called on the Middle East’s only nuclear-armed state to join the community of nations and adhere – finally - to this vitally important non-proliferation regime.

Notably, Canada imposes sanctions on Iran “in response to Iran’s nuclear and WMD [weapons of mass destruction] programs.” 33 However, unlike Israel, Iran possesses no nuclear weapons and is a party to the NPT. Moreover, in 2012, the New York Times reported that “American intelligence analysts continue to believe that there is no hard evidence that Iran has decided to build a nuclear bomb.” 34 In other words, Canada’s government sanctions a state that is a party to the NPT and that has no nuclear weapons and no apparent program to build nuclear weapons. But it votes against a U.N. resolution that has almost universal support and that calls upon Israel - the Middle East’s only nuclear-armed state - to accede to the NPT, a treaty to which Canada itself is a party.

In 2016, one year after Canada opposed the U.N.’s NPT resolution (as well as a host of other resolutions critical of Israel), the U.N. Security Council adopted a resolution declaring that Israeli settlements on territory intended for a Palestinian state were a “flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of...peace” between Israel and Palestine.\(^{35}\) The unanimous Security Council vote (with the U.S. abstaining) reflected a long-standing international consensus on the illegality of the settlements. Indeed, in 2004, the International Court of Justice ruled unanimously, and with the concurrence of the United States judge), that Israel’s settlements violate the Fourth Geneva Convention.\(^ {36} \)

Although that resolution enjoyed overwhelming support of Security Council members, including Canadian allies France, the United Kingdom and New Zealand, the Trudeau government remained conspicuously silent after its adoption.\(^ {37} \)

On February 6, 2017, Israel’s Knesset passed a ‘Settlement Regulation’ Law which aimed to retroactively normalize dozens of wildcat settlements under Israeli law. The Trudeau government only then admonished Israel, albeit meekly. In a statement\(^ {38} \) issued quietly, Canada’s new Foreign Minister Chrystia Freeland said that the Settlement Regulation law was “unhelpful to the advancement of the peace process in the region.” At the same time, she reiterated that Canada is a “steadfast friend and ally of Israel” and reaffirmed Canada’s commitment to “Israel’s right to live in peace with its neighbours within secure boundaries and free of terrorism...”

Canada currently imposes sanctions on 21 countries.\(^ {39} \) Those sanctions take a variety of forms, including asset freezes, arms embargoes and financial restrictions.\(^ {40} \) Over two-thirds of the countries sanctioned by Canada are situated in Africa or the Middle East, and nearly one-half of them are predominantly Muslim. Canada has never imposed sanctions on Israel and, in Canada’s Parliament, there has been no meaningful debate about sanctioning Israel.

Russia is one of the few countries sanctioned by Canada that is neither African nor predominantly Muslim. Canada’s Government states that it has imposed sanctions on Russia “to respond to the gravity of Russia’s violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine.” It is instructive to compare the Canadian government’s response to Israel’s relentless settlement construction to its response to Russia’s annexation of Crimea. In 2014, Russia annexed Crimea after a violent revolution toppled Ukraine’s pro-Russian but democratically elected President, Viktor Yanukovych. Prior to the annexation, a referendum was held in Crimea in which 97% of Crimeans voted for integration into the Russian Federation. The turnout was 83%. Trudeau’s reaction to the annexation was to accuse Vladimir Putin of being a “bully” whom Trudeau would “confront” and to impose more economic sanctions on Russia.

Much of the international community regards the Crimean referendum as invalid, primarily because it was held while Russian troops occupied Crimea. But in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, there has been no referendum at all in which occupied Palestinians have voted to live under Israeli rule. Indeed, if such a vote were held today, it is virtually certain that Palestinians would vote overwhelmingly for independence from Israel, notwithstanding the presence of Israeli troops on occupied Palestinian territory. Yet the Trudeau government regards Putin as a “bully” whose country deserves to be sanctioned, while it considers Israel’s government, which by the Canadian Government’s own admission has illegally annexed East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, as Canada’s “best friend and ally” whose “flagrant violation under international law” is merely “unhelpful.”

The Canadian Government’s Double Standard on Sanctions and Israel Cannot Be Reconciled with Canadian Public Opinion

The present survey results reveal that the Canadian Government’s refusal to sanction or even condemn Israel is not only hypocritical and contrary to the overwhelming weight of international opinion, but it is also contrary to the views held by most Canadians, including the vast majority of those who support the governing Liberal Party.

Sixty-six percent of respondents who expressed a view stated that they believe that government sanctions on Israel would be reasonable. Among Liberal Party supporters, 75% of respondents who expressed a view stated that they view sanctions on Israel as reasonable. Only supporters of the Conservatives were mostly opposed to sanctions on Israel. Nonetheless, 30% of Conservative Party supporters who expressed a view said that they considered sanctions on Israel to be reasonable. This is a remarkable level of sympathy for sanctions given the Conservative leadership’s refusal to utter so much as a word of criticism about Israel.

The survey further revealed that people under 35 years of age tend to show greater sympathy toward sanctions on Israel. It makes sense that younger Canadians would be more sympathetic to sanctions than those who grew up with an Israel-centric view of the conflict. Until the past 15 years or so, Palestinian issues have received very little publicity in Canada, and Israel was viewed far more positively than it is now. Many assumed then that, in good faith, Israel wanted to bring an end to its military occupation and settlement construction in the Palestinian territories. They believed in the efficacy of a U.S. mediated Peace Process to bring this about, and thought that Palestinians, rather than Israel, were unreasonably obstructing these peace efforts. More recently, however, especially on university campuses, awareness of the oppressive conditions Israel imposes on Palestinians has risen. And Israeli policies, practices, and statements suggest that Israel seeks to annex the West Bank without negotiating with Palestinians or granting West Bank Palestinians citizenship or basic rights enjoyed by Jewish Israelis. As Israel and pro-Israel lobby groups in Canada feared, public sympathy for Israel appears to be waning, especially among young adults.

The survey also revealed that those with higher educational levels tend to be more sympathetic to sanctions on Israel. We infer that this is a result of the fact that more highly educated people have a better grasp of the independent, critical debate on Israel.

The Vast Majority of Canadians Consider the Palestinians’ Call for a Boycott to be Reasonable

Perhaps the most remarkable finding of the survey is that the vast majority of Canadians consider the Palestinians’ call for a boycott of Israel to be reasonable. The movement for Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions, or “BDS”, is an anti-racist movement that advocates for peaceful but meaningful economic and political measures to compel Israel to respect the human rights of Palestinians. Yet few, if any, social justice movements have been as vilified by the Canadian political establishment as the BDS movement.

As discussed above, both Canada’s Parliament and the legislature of Canada’s most populous province, Ontario, have adopted motions condemning the BDS movement. Those motions were supported by elected officials from the federal and provincial Liberal and Conservative parties. Although neither such motion explicitly accused BDS supporters of being anti-Semitic, the debates preceding the adoption of these motions certainly did.

For example, Progressive Conservative MPP Gila Martow, who introduced the anti-BDS motion in Ontario’s legislature, argued for a complete ban on the BDS movement on university campuses, and asserted that college students “incur hostility and see demonstrations that demonize the Jewish community and Israel. That affects their psychological well-being and makes it difficult for them to continue their studies. We would not be here supporting the Ku Klux Klan on our campuses, so why are we allowing [the] BDS movement and other anti-Jewish and anti-Israel organizations to have demonstrations and use our campuses, which are taxpayer-funded?”

Similarly, in arguing for his anti-BDS motion in Canada’s Parliament, Conservative MP Tony Clement stated:

I would put it before this House that this BDS movement is actually a form of discrimination. In targeting all Israelis, BDS is a present-day blacklist and a form of discrimination, strictly based on national origin. Just like boycotts have targeted Jews

49 See the BDS Movement website at: https://bdsmovement.net/what-is-bds.
throughout history, today BDS activists call on boycotting people who come from the Jewish state.\textsuperscript{51}

Mr. Clement then asserted, without citing any evidence to support his claim, that “this motion accurately reflects Canadian values, Canadian interests, Canadian principles, and Canadian morality.” He concluded his remarks in Parliament by urging his fellow MPs to “send a strong message to our fellow Canadians and to freedom lovers around the world and support this motion.”\textsuperscript{52}

The present survey leaves no doubt that Canada’s “freedom lovers” found Mr. Clement’s attack on the BDS movement to be wholly unpersuasive, and that, contrary to Mr. Clement’s claim, Parliament’s anti-BDS motion does not remotely reflect “Canadian values, Canadian interests, Canadian principles, and Canadian morality.”

When asked whether they consider the Palestinian call for a boycott to be reasonable, an overwhelming majority of respondents who offered a view (78\%) said yes. Among Liberal Party supporters, whose MPs and MPPs overwhelmingly supported the anti-BDS motions in Parliament and in the Ontario legislature, a stunning 88\% of those who offered an opinion agreed that the Palestinian call for a boycott was reasonable. Among supporters of the NDP, the Green Party and the Bloc Quebecois, over 90\% of respondents who offered a view considered the boycott call to be reasonable. Even among supporters of Mr. Clement’s own party, almost half (49\%) considered Palestinians’ call for a boycott to be reasonable.

As was consistently the case across all survey questions, sympathy for the Palestinian call for a boycott was highest among those aged under 35, and those with a university education. It was lowest among those who possessed only a high school education.

In addition, a majority of respondents who expressed a view (53\%) stated that they opposed Parliament’s anti-BDS motion. Opposition to that motion was approximately twice as great as support for the motion (26\%). Fifty-five percent of Liberal Party supporters opposed Parliament’s anti-BDS motion, nearly three times as many as those who said that they supported it (20\%). Only among supporters of the Conservative Party was support for the anti-BDS motion higher than opposition to the motion. However, even among Conservative Party supporters, less than a majority stated that they supported Parliament’s anti-BDS motion: 46\% of those who offered a view stated that they supported it, whereas 33\% stated that they opposed it and 21\% stated that they neither opposed nor supported it.

Opposition to Parliament’s anti-BDS motion was highest among Green Party supporters (78% opposed vs 13% supportive) and NDP supporters (71% vs. 15% supportive).

Conclusion

As we discussed in Part 1 of our report, a major conclusion of this study is that the Liberal, NDP, and Green participants’ party positions on the question of Israel/Palestine do not accord with the views of their respective constituencies. As we stated in Part 1:

In Canada, political elites cling to the view that a vigorous defense of Palestinians rights would erode support for their parties. The results of this survey strongly suggest that the opposite is true, that demanding Israel’s respect for Palestinian rights will attract support from centrist and left-leaning voters. These parties would be well advised to revise their political platforms in relation to Israel/Palestine to better reflect their constituents’ views. Furthermore, given these survey results, members of these parties should more confidently call for these policy changes.

53 On February 13, 2017, the Green Party of Canada announced that its members had adopted a resolution calling for sanctions on Israel. That resolution, which received the support of 90% of Green Party members who voted, also calls for the International Criminal Court to prioritize its investigation into potential Israeli war crimes, and calls on Canada’s government to recognize the State of Israel. Thus, as of February 13, 2017, the Green Party of Canada’s platform is more closely aligned with Canadian public opinion on Israel/Palestine. The Green Party’s sanctions resolution is available here: https://www.greenparty.ca/en/sgm-2016/voting/resolutions/s16-p013.
APPENDIX 1: Liberal Voting at UN Mimics that of Harper Government

Despite expectations otherwise, the Liberal government has continued the pro-Israel voting patterns at the UN that were established under the Harper government. Canada lost international respect under Harper because of his government’s failure to take a nuanced stance on questions relating to Israel-Palestine.

The sections below provide an example of the Trudeau government’s refusal to change to Canada’s stance vis-à-vis Israel and the Palestinians. Documenting the first 18 months of the Trudeau government’s tenure at the UN, the Liberal government continued to keep Canada in a small minority, while Canada’s Western European allies took a much more balanced and defensible approach.

   - 6 No (Canada, Micronesia, Israel, Marshall Islands, Palau, US)
   - 56 Abstain
20. “Assistance to the Palestinian people” (A/RES/70/108)

Adopted without a vote 10 December 2015

Excerpt: “Gravely concerned at the difficult living conditions and humanitarian situation affecting the Palestinian people, in particular women and children, throughout the occupied Palestinian territory...”

Additional U.N. Resolutions addressing Israel-Palestine

At the United Nations Environmental Assembly in Nairobi, at the end of May, Canada was one of three member states—along with Israel and the U.S.—to oppose a resolution calling for an assessment of the environmental crisis in Gaza. Using their combined influence, these three nations managed to bury the motion through a technicality. As such, Canada appears to be part of a small minority at the UN which fights against equal application of international law and human rights in Israel-Palestine.\(^{55}\)

20. “Assistance to the Palestinian people” (A/RES/71/126):
Adopted without a vote 8 December 2016
“On 31 July 2015, an arson attack by Jewish extremists in the village of Duma, in the occupied West Bank, killed three of the four members of the Dawabsheh family. Holding Israel “fully responsible”, the Palestine Liberation Organization linked the attack to what it claimed was a decades-long Israeli policy of impunity towards settler attacks. The Government of Israel issued several indictments on 3 January 2016 and two Israelis were later convicted.”
