St. Paul police have identified two officers involved in the non-lethal shooting of a man following a domestic situation earlier this week.

On Wednesday, police said the officers are Joseph Higgins, a seven-year veteran of the department, and Ramar Davis, a five-year veteran of the department.

On Tuesday, the officers went to the 200 block of Aurora Avenue, near University Avenue and Rice Street, about 4 a.m. Kevin Lloyd Carroll's girlfriend had called police because he was trying to "forcibly" get into her home, where he also lived.

The officers then located Carroll, 47, next to a vehicle near Galtier Street and Fuller Avenue.

Police said Carroll refused the officers' orders to show his hands and get down on the ground. Police said that led to Higgins firing his service weapon, as he feared for his life.

Carroll is at Regions Hospital with what are believed to be non-life-threatening injuries.

Higgins and Davis remain on three-day administrative leave per department policy.
