

What will you say

...when a patient asks for your help to die?

From 1 July 2021, Western Australians who satisfy the eligibility criteria under the Voluntary Assisted Dying Act 2019 (the Act) will be able to request medical assistance in dying.

Although many health practitioners will be affected by the implementation of the new law in the ordinary course of providing health care, doctors and nurse practitioners who satisfy the eligibility requirements and are accredited under the Act may choose to be involved in more formal roles. Accreditation training will be provided online by the Department of Health to qualifying practitioners and is likely to attract CPD points.

Please click on the link below to let Dying with Dignity WA know if you would consider participating in the voluntary assisted dying process. The survey will take no more than 5 minutes to complete.

88% of Western Australians supported this change in the law. They need help to see it implemented safely and compassionately.
