

CUBA: Socialism, Cooperatives and Building a Solidarity Economy

Visit this vibrant, changing society with the Center for Global Justice. Learn how it is changing from a state directed system to one open to private and collective actors. Find out about the impact of an evolving relation to the US on Cuban society. See how ordinary people are adjusting their lives to new possibilities. Experience a society in motion.

The first week of this trip will give you an overview of Cuban society and the changes underway, with a focus on the new cooperatives developing. The second week will feature an exchange with leading Cuban thinkers discussing the reinvention of socialism and the opportunities for expanded exchanges between the people of the US and Cuba. You are invited to present a short paper for this dialog.

In organizing this trip the Center for Global Justice draws on 25 years of experience with educational travel to Cuba, drawing on a wealth of Cubans and their institutions to design a unique program that will open up a new world to you.

It is estimated that this 14 day trip will cost $2,000 plus airfare (currently $450 from Miami), including shared hotel room, breakfasts, translation, guide, and the program of activities. This estimate is subject to change in light of the fluctuating hotel costs due to increased travel to Cuba from the US. Deadline for applications is April 15, 2016.

For further information email cuba@globaljusticecenter.org

Cuba: Socialism, Cooperatives, and Building a Solidarity Economy
June 19 to July 2, 2016

Endorsers: Al Campbell; Cliff DuRand; Jessica Gordon Nembhard; Len Krimerman; Michael A. Lebowitz, Bob Stone; Harry Targ; Victor Wallis