8/18/2020	Email from resident regarding turbine sound.	Email from Barre resident.	Hi Carmen, I would like to know given the current plan how many wind turbines within 1 mile of our home there would be and what the greatest aggregate sound would be at any given instant. I would like that to include the sound to include if and when brakes go on to slow them down when it is too windy for them to handle the wind. Please respond knowing that I do not have strong enough internet to perform these tasks and that I do not feel capable of extrapolating from raw data. Please mail me the answer in decibels for any given instant. NOT AVERAGE. Thank you. Iva McKenna	Applicant responded on 8/21/20: Hi Iva, Thanks for reaching out! I understand your feeling regarding the internet. I have DSL myself and the work from home life is not always the easiest. To answer a couple of your questions; Your house has 5 turbines within 1 mile of it (T23; T24; T26; T28; T31). You should not hear the sound of the turbine adjusting from your house. The turbine noise when it is yawing into the wind is actually very low. If the turbine is maintained properly and greased adequately it won't be heard unless you are right underneath the tower. Jess had sent you the page number and your receptor ID in the past and your receptor ID is 330 and the analysis begins on page 363 of Part 5 of the PNIA. As you have heard from Jess, we are legally required to use setbacks that do not let the sound levels go higher than 45 dBA at the outside of your home. When all turbines are operating at maximum capacity, worst-case sound levels from every wind turbine combined at your home would be 41 dBA (Vestas Turbine). Worst-case modeling predicts a worst-case 1-hour Leq. Best, Carmen O'Keefe
