Trends in IBD Research (6:40 - 7:15 pm eastern) is a new session that will explore key perspectives around addressing unmet needs in the IBD clinical setting, including the ability to predict the course of disease, as well as the impact and efficacy of treatment. The focus of the discussion will be on genetic testing, mobile health, and pharmacokinetic modeling as means for expanding the value of precision medicine in the IBD clinical setting. The presentation will feature expert perspectives from IBD providers within the network, as well as patient perspectives from the Patient Advisory Council. RSVP to join >>

Community Engagement in the Time of COVID-19 (7:15-7:35 pm eastern) is an opportunity to learn from the Stanford Children's Health team about their experience navigating COVID-19 and continuing to prioritize IBD community engagement; making the shift to offering virtual events and interactions that have provided their patients and families with uninterrupted clinical care, reliable sources of IBD-related information, and the ability to stay connected, ask questions and develop valuable coping skills to help navigate this unpredictable time successfully.
