Hassen Chalghoumi is the imam of the Drancy municipal mosque in Seine-Saint-Denis, near Paris. In 2009, he founded the Conference of Imams, an organization tasked with issuing religious rulings for Muslims living in France. In recent years, Chalghoumi has become a leading moderate Muslim voice in France. Under his leadership, the Conference of Imams has grown to include more than 150 imams across France. The French government considers the Conference as the official voice of the moderate Muslim community in France. Imam Chalghoumi maintains close relations with Jewish organizations in France, despite internal opposition in the Muslim community which has included demonstrations and clashes outside the Drancy mosque.
