Increasing extreme weather events are causing suffering and economic devastation throughout the developing world. Discussions at the G7, United Nations Forum on Financing for Development and various regional government fora are exploring tools for innovative finance to offer relief when natural disaster strikes. Recent reports from the International Monetary Fund, the UN Conference on Trade and Development and the Vatican highlight concerns about potential economic shocks, increasing debt vulnerabilities, shadow finance and possible financial crisis. Some examples of recent initiatives and proposals the session will explore include hurricane clauses, debt payment moratoriums, model law, budget and revenue transparency provisions and natural-disaster-triggered debt restructuring.
