Introduction

THE LABOUR PARTY SUPPORTS POLITICAL PARTIES AND NETWORKS IN NEW AND EMERGING DEMOCRACIES ABROAD THROUGH ITS INTERNATIONAL DEMOCRACY PROGRAMME

We work together to ensure the values of fairness, equality of opportunity, justice, international solidarity and human rights are shared across the world.

As one of the oldest and most established social democratic parties in the world, Labour has long sought to share experiences and build alliances with like-minded parties. We do this by delivering a rolling programme of activities that develop the political positions and the institutional capacity of like-minded parties and regional networks. Throughout, we focus on working with women and young people; two groups that are often overlooked and marginalised in the political process and yet who are essential to the future of any democracy.

We work in countries all over the world; but predominantly in the Western Balkans, Eastern Europe, the Middle East and North Africa and sub-Saharan Africa.

How we’re funded

Labour receives funds from the Westminster Foundation for Democracy (WFD) - a public body sponsored by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with additional funding from the Department for International Development. WFD builds the capacity of parliaments and political parties; delivering parliamentary work itself whilst providing resources to the Westminster based parties to work directly with their counterparts.

The funding from WFD enables Labour to run projects with political parties and regional networks designed around their specific needs and in line with our international strategy.
THE LABOUR PARTY’S INTERNATIONAL PROJECTS IN 2015-16 FOCUSED ON THREE KEY AREAS

These were:

1) Strengthening sister and like-minded parties’ organisation and policy development so that they could offer their citizens a choice and an opportunity to engage with the democratic process.

2) Supporting and developing the skills set of social democratic women to play an active role in party politics and public life.

3) Supporting and developing the capacity and skills of social democratic youth to participate in political processes and democratic practices at local, national and international levels.

In all regions, we worked with both established and nascent parties, always tailoring our support according to the local party’s needs and the political context in which they operate. We also arranged study visits to the UK and overseas to share best practice and to complement the support provided through the bilateral and regional programmes.

This document gives a summary of the projects we completed in the financial year 2015-16 and focuses primarily on what changes came about as a result of this support.

Section 1: Yearly Overview

Political Update

The past year has brought both challenges and opportunities for our sister parties across different regions. Our partners have faced challenges including a national political environment increasingly hostile and negative towards them (particularly in the MENA region), a lack of activist base and a limited profile through which to promote their agenda to the public. Some of them have dealt with the challenges of being a junior coalition partner in government, the importance of differentiation, and their identity towards the electorate in the period that followed. Our activities have been designed with the particular context at the centre of considerations, and tailored to meet a particular need or develop a particular capacity.

In the Western Balkans, the migration crisis and continuing economic difficulties proved a challenging context for social democratic parties. Both the Democratic Party and Social Democratic Union in Serbia sought to gather support ahead of planned local elections in spring 2016, when the centre-right government called an early national election. The Democratic Party-led coalition gained around 6% of the popular vote and won 16 seats in the National Assembly. Despite strong mobilisation efforts, the Social Democratic Union again fell short of the 5% threshold needed to obtain representation in the National Assembly. They were however able to establish new local branches and develop stronger links with wider stakeholders ahead of future electoral challenges.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, our partners have gone through a period of consolidation after going into opposition in 2014 and now look ahead to municipal elections later in 2016. They have developed structures and internal capacities to a position where they have strong consultative policy-making processes.

In Macedonia, the Social Democratic Union (SDSM) continued its on-and-off boycott of Parliament since 2014 as the only leverage in compelling its political opponents to resolve the political impasse. The situation has developed into a fully-fledged crisis after the SDSM published evidence on large-scale illegal interception of communication of over 20,000 Macedonian citizens, with the centre-right Prime Minister resigning and EU mediation talks seeking to find a way forward ahead of fresh elections. The elections originally planned first for April and then for June 2016 were postponed because basic conditions for a free fair and credible vote (audit of the Voters’ List and reforms in the media) were not met. At the time of writing it appears that elections would take place in December 2016.

Our partners in Montenegro faced internal challenges, but now look forward to parliamentary elections later in 2016, when for the first time in 18 years they will run entirely independently from the governing Democratic Party of Socialists. They have strengthened the capacity of their local boards to have an effective presence across the country, ready for this electoral challenge.

In Eastern Europe, the Democratic Party of Moldova (DPM) has formed part of the governing pro-European coalition since 2009. The subsequent period has witnessed a number of changes including a corruption scandal involving senior members of the government focused around the Liberal Democratic Party. Protests have affected the country, organised and supported by the pro-Russian opposition parties. The governing coalition has changed its leading figures and our sister party now holds the position of Prime Minister.

In Ukraine, President Poroshenko has consolidated his power after his supporters won majorities at the 2014 parliamentary elections and the most seats in 2015 local elections. The New Social Democratic Platform has strengthened its capacity promoting social democratic values across the country. This has also been possible through the members and activists of the SD platform who were elected to local councils in the local elections of 2015, particularly in the Kharkiv and Rivne regions. It has since broadened its base of support across the country and its links with other key stakeholders in Ukrainian society.

In the Middle East region, instability and insecurity has continued to challenge our work with regional networks. Following the 2014 elections, progressives in Tunisia have continued to work on their party structures and organisation. They are working on building their own training team to develop the skills and capacities of their local campaign teams and candidates ahead of municipal elections initially planned later this year. In Egypt the restrictions on political activity and protest, amidst an ongoing threat of terrorism has proved extremely difficult for our partners. The parliamentary elections in the autumn of 2015, boycotted by a number of opposition parties, proved another step in the consolidation of power by President Sisi and his supporters.

The Women’s Academy for Africa has developed its organisational structures, bringing women together across the continent, involved in parties facing challenges in general and local elections.
Outcomes

The overall goal of the Labour Party’s international democracy programme is to provide choice to citizens in developing democracies through well-functioning and accountable social democratic parties. This is a long-term goal that can take many years, if not decades, to achieve. The scope in which we operate is limited and a number of other factors determine whether a political party or network is able to flourish. Nevertheless, we were pleased to see the following outcomes from our work over the past year:

The Tha’era network provided an essential platform through which to organise an international mobilisation campaign after the fatal shooting of Shaimaa el-Sabbagh in January 2015. The campaign led to the arrest of the officer responsible, the first time a member of the police force has been indicted for their actions. The network has supported the development of a feminist journal named in memory of Shaimaa, and a regional workshop in Beirut on best practice in fighting for women’s equality in politics including through electoral quotas.

The Social Democratic Women’s Mentoring Programme established links across regions and encouraged young women to engage in politics. The development of one young woman from Egypt in particular through the mentoring programme was recognised when she was selected as one of the young members of the Global Thinkers Forum 2016 and another was invited as a speaker to a conference in Brussels marking International Women’s Day.

Through the training and capacity-building programme we facilitated, some of our partners in the Western Balkans have developed a consultative policy-making process, enshrined into their party statute, and moved to a democratic process of leadership selection through one-member one-vote.

Figure 5: Conference in the Western Balkans to implement new consultative policy-making process (February 2016)
In Serbia our support enabled our partners to continue to develop a successful weekend youth academy, as well as provide training to strengthen its campaign team ahead of elections in April 2016. Some of our partners have developed strong cooperation with a number of trade union branches, a link that is not well established in the region. Following the strengthening of its youth academy, one of its members was elected Secretary General of the Young European Socialists, the autonomous youth wing of the Party of European Socialists (PES). This was the first time an individual from the Western Balkans has been elected to the board of any European political organisation.

Our continued support for the Women’s Academy for Africa (WAFA) facilitated the holding of four regional workshops to help develop an action plan for the network as well as a pool of trainers in each country. An evaluation meeting was held in September 2015, and following that, a number of national workshops have taken place to disseminate the benefits of the network. Women have received valuable training in women’s empowerment, leadership, campaign and media skills and a training manual was produced.

A number of the participants involved in WAFA have taken up leadership positions in their respective parties and countries, including Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, 2nd National Chair of the party, and Treasurer General of the party. The latter said on her election that she “wouldn’t have done it” without the empowerment programmes provided by WAFA and the Labour Party.

Following our sustained support, the New Social Democratic Platform in Ukraine has strengthened its organisation and its communication and outreach, enabling it to recruit new members and reach more citizens. It held training sessions across the country on the key topics of employment and women’s rights.

LGBTI Rights in the Western Balkans

We supported the holding of a conference on Protecting and Strengthening LGBTI Rights in South East Europe in November 2015 in Belgrade, Serbia, gathering together LGBTI activists from the region, social democratic political foundations and parties and experts. As a result, participants will now work together to look at further support work from the social democratic parties in the region, including helping them to establish networks for their LGBT members.

Best Practice
Building on previous years, a number of visits have taken place bringing participants from across different regions to gain best practice on issues of local government and elections. Participants looked at how to enhance their skills in areas ranging from policy messaging, press and digital communications to on-the-ground campaigning. In some instances they developed new skills and ideas such as pushing for legislation to better support local councils in their home country, and implementing voter identification techniques based on their experience in the UK.
OUR PROJECTS ARE FUNDED THROUGH AN ANNUAL GRANT FROM THE WESTMINSTER FOUNDATION FOR DEMOCRACY

The charts below show the breakdown of expenditure in 2015-16 according to three key areas and then by region.

!Expenditure by objective

Expenditure by objective

- Party organisation and policy development: 51%
- Social democratic women: 27%
- Social democratic youth: 22%

Expenditure by region

- Africa: 19%
- Western Balkans and Eastern Europe: 21%
- Middle East and North Africa: 18%
- Rest of the World: 42%
Section 2: In depth analysis

Objective 1 - Party organisation and policy development

Our bilateral work with sister parties has focused on a number of areas of party strengthening, including around policy development, organisation, campaigning and communications and media strategies.

Western Balkans

Our support enabled our partners in Macedonia to organise leadership development and member motivation training sessions, helping to improve the connection and exchange between the leadership and the municipal branches of the party in both directions. Strong steps have been demonstrated towards a more consultative and open process of the party and its policy development. Team leaders were trained ahead of the next elections, and will play an essential role in carrying out field checks in the process of auditing the electoral roll.

In Montenegro, our partners organised regional party development workshops with our support, familiarising grassroots activists and party members with policy formation. Concrete steps were made towards developing consultative structures. As a result, the municipal boards represented agreed to replicate the training at the local level.

Some of our partners in Serbia have enhanced its internal party systems through its programme of local campaign workshops. It has also been able to strengthen its links with trade unions through ongoing meetings and collaboration, a practice that is little developed in the region. Other partners developed a Train the Trainers manual focusing on election processes. As a direct result of the project, a sufficient number of trained activists were able to cover all polling stations during the elections, including for opposition parties who had no capacity to have their own observers.

Following policy forums supported by this project, our partners in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) passed amendments to its Statute to commit to a 2-year policy-making cycle. In addition, the Youth Forum developed a policy document on the legislative changes needed to implement a work experience programme for young people in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The document was developed along with the amendments needed to the existing legal framework. This was followed by a street campaign and petition signed by young people in the majority of cities and municipalities.

Eastern Europe

The New Social Democratic Platform in Ukraine has strengthened its organisation and its communication and outreach, enabling it to recruit new members and reach more citizens. It held training sessions across the country on the key topics of employment and women’s rights, and presented its leadership through a press conference at one of the most recognisable press points in Ukraine the “Gorshenin Institute”.

Middle East and North Africa
In Tunisia, we have continued our work to support policy-making and communications strategies, ahead of local elections in 2017. The training has helped candidates and organisers with voter targeting, rebutting criticisms from other parties and crystallising their message to citizens.

Objective 2 - Social democratic women

Women’s Academy for Africa
The Women’s Academy for Africa (WAFA) has been an excellent example of women working together to enhance their political skills and confidence and make use of these skills to engage in political processes and apply for leadership or candidate positions. In recent months, the national workshops have enabled the network to spread its reach to women activists at the grassroots level across a range of countries on the continent. Participants learned about women’s empowerment, leadership, campaign and media skills. More generally, participants involved in the Women’s Academy for Africa have taken up leadership positions in their respective parties and countries, with one women leader saying she “wouldn’t have done it” without the empowerment programmes provided by WAFA and the Labour Party.

Arab Women’s Network
The Tha'era Arab Women's Network has given skills and confidence to its members against the background of an increasingly restrictive political climate. Following the fatal shooting of one of its members Shaimaa el-Sabbagh, the network rallied together and organised a coordinated national, regional and international campaign calling for the police officer responsible to be held accountable. Evaluation sessions led to a strategy plan formulated around registration, communication and expansion. The network has since supported the development of a feminist journal named in memory of Shaimaa, and a regional workshop in Beirut on best practice in fighting for women’s equality in politics including through electoral quotas.

Women’s Mentoring Platform
The Social Democratic Women’s Mentoring Platform established links between women activists across three regions, a truly valuable cross-border and cross-cultural exchange. As a result of the workshops, participants agreed action plans to continue work between mentoring pairs in the different countries and engage their party leadership in the need to promote better women’s involvement.

Objective 3 - Social democratic youth

Future Leaders
Within our MENA region programme we developed a Future Leaders’ project where participants received training on public speaking, campaigning, press strategy and leadership skills. The participants are now looking to take ownership of a more formalised regional youth network, and as result of the training colleagues from Lebanon used the skills gained to organise local campaign seminars.

Summer Academy
Our Summer Academy for young activists across Eastern Europe continued this year, where it focused on equipping participants with the knowledge, confidence, and ability to repeat the training as a trainer. Detailed sessions covered developing social democratic policies on issues such as youth unemployment, improving infrastructure, and education, developing campaign messages and interview techniques. Participants were galvanised to mobilise supporters in their organisations and utilise the skills learned to full effect.

SD9
The network of young social democrats in the Western Balkans, known as SD9, successfully relaunched towards the end of the year. The network held a conference on the topic of migration in March, bringing together participants across 6 countries of the region. The participants resolved to work together on the issue to improve the quality of narrative of refugees in social media, and put greater pressure on political leadership in their countries to demand greater solidarity from heads of European governments.
The SD9 coordinators have held regular discussions, including on closer cooperation with the wider movement including the Young European Socialists. These will continue in the coming months.
