Chinese for Labour

Rt Hon Ed Balls MP, Shadow Chancellor says Britain needs a strong and mature relationship with China, based on self-interest and on mutual respect.

1. Many Chinese feel that the Labour Party has deserted them, and local Constituency Labour Parties are unwelcoming to new members, how can you assure them that this is not the case?

There's no doubt that we need to do more as a party to listen to the people we are in politics to represent. That is one of the lessons from our general election defeat in 2010. Part of the answer lies in developing strong campaigns and compelling policies that respond to voters' concerns – like Labour's five point plan for jobs and growth that we are promoting up and down the country right now.

But how the Party operates – from grass roots level right up to the top – is equally important too. Our new General Secretary Iain McNicol is working to modernise the Party and make it more outward looking: reaching out to local communities, strengthening links with organisations that share our values like Chinese for Labour, and encouraging local parties to offer a wide range of activities, from campaigning to fundraising to social events to help attract new members and supporters. The best constituency parties are right at the centre of their communities and we need to help every CLP aim to be as good as the best.

Ensuring our Party really is representative of modern British society is crucial too. There is much further to go, but it is great news that in December Sarah Owen was selected as Labour's first ever Chinese parliamentary candidate and, I hope, in time, the first of many Chinese Labour MPs.

2. As a senior Labour politician, what can we do to encourage more young Chinese to engage and participate in politics?

With both youth unemployment and tuition fees at all time highs as a result of this government's reckless policies, the outlook for our young people is darkening by the day. As Ed Miliband has rightly highlighted the Promise of Britain – that the next generation will do better than the last – is being broken by this government. More than ever we need to work through organisations like Young Labour and Labour Students to encourage young men and women in every community and every part of the UK to come on board with us to make the case for change.

I have spoken at two busy and vibrant Young Labour events in recent months, so I can testify to their dynamism and enthusiasm – and their membership is growing fast too. By focusing their campaigning on youth unemployment, Young Labour seem to me to be hitting exactly the right target to motivate more and more young people to get involved.

3. The government's economic and immigration policies are affecting many ethnic businesses generally, Chinese businesses in particular especially in recruiting highly skilled chefs, herbalists and engineers from abroad. What would the next Labour government do to offer comfort to these businesses?

Britain has always been an outward looking trading nation and for the sake of our economy it is very important that we build that capability. Strong, fair and balanced policies on migration are an important part of this mix. But the government's crude immigration cap is both bad for managing migration and bad for business too. The next Labour government will need to learn lessons from our time in office but also clear up the mess that this government's policies looks set to create.

More widely, this is an incredibly tough time for businesses. Small and medium-sized firms are facing a really challenging time and that includes thousands of Chinese run SMEs. The government's policies are making things worse not better. By raising taxes and cutting spending too far and too fast they destroyed business confidence and squeezed the life out of the economy, well before the recent eurozone crisis. And with slow growth and more people out of work, they're also failing to get the deficit down in the way they say they would. That is why we have been urging the government to change course and part of Labour's jobs plan includes a national insurance tax break for small firms who take on extra workers.

4. The Prime Minister warned African states over China's 'authoritarian capitalism', claiming that it is unsustainable in the long term, an insult to the Chinese government yet at the same time, he prances around asking China to invest in UK. What would you do as Chancellor to engage positively with China?

Britain needs a strong and mature relationship with China, based on self-interest and on mutual respect. I have visited China a number of times – both as a Financial Times journalist and a government Minister – and I have seen first-hand how much each country has to gain from the other. For the sake of our economy, it is really important that we strengthen our links with China so our businesses can take full advantage of the many commercial opportunities that the huge and fast-growing Chinese market offers.

This doesn't mean we should be an uncritical friend. Commitment to global progress on respect for human rights has always been central to the Labour Party's foreign policy approach and something we should be justifiably proud of. But we must not indulge in posturing and grandstanding, because this is usually counter-productive, as well as immature. We'll leave that to David Cameron.

5. China is an important trade partner, and a global powerhouse, learning the Chinese language would put our young people at an advantageous position, do you think our schools should encourage the teaching and learning of Chinese? Absolutely. When I was Schools Secretary in the last Labour Government we positively encouraged both primary and secondary schools to teach Mandarin. At the time some commentators questioned the wisdom of promoting Mandarin over, say French and German, but today there is growing recognition that, as China becomes an ever larger economy and trading partner, young people who learn the language will stand to benefit.

国会议员、影子财政大臣埃德·鲍斯阁下表示，英国需要在考虑自身利益和相互尊重的基础上同中国保持稳健和成熟的国家关系。

1. 很多华人觉得工党已经遗弃他们了，而地方选区的工党对新党员缺乏热忱，您如何让他们确信事实并非如此？

毫无疑问，我们作为一个政党要有更多的举措，去倾听我们所代表的人们的呼声。这是我们从2010年全国大选失利中所汲取的教训。答案之一就是针对选民们关心的问题组织竞选活动、制定有号召力的政策，比如目前我们在全国上下推广的旨在保就业促增长的工党五点计划。

而工党从基层直到高层的运作方式也同样重要。我们党的新任总书记伊恩·麦克尼柯尔正致力于让工党现代化和更具开放性的工作，深入到地方的社区里；同像华人工党这样与我们有共同价值观的组织加强联系，鼓励地方党部提供广泛的活动：竞选活动、募款和社会活动以吸引新的党员和支持者。最棒的地方党部总是深入他们所在的社区，而我们需要帮助每一个选区的党部做到最好。

确保我们的政党真正地代表了现代英国社会是同等重要的。尽管路还很长，但就在12月，萨拉·欧文被选为工党第一个华裔国会议员候选人的消息让人振奋，而且我希望她届时能成为第一位华裔的工党国会议员。

Chinese New Year Message from Rt Hon Ed Miliband MP, Leader of the Opposition and Labour Party

Friends,

I want to wish all those here in Britain and across the world celebrating the Chinese New Year, health and happiness for the year ahead.

As you mark the start of the Year of the Dragon, collectively we can celebrate the many contributions the Chinese community here makes to our national life – to our economy, to our culture and to the richness of our society as a whole. As we plan for the future, we must continue our efforts to support our British Chinese community, by increasing Chinese representation in public life, and by further enhancing community cohesion in this country.

With my warmest regards at this happy time,
Ed Miliband

朋友们：

我祝福所有那些在英国和世界各地欢度中国新年的人们：在新的一年里，健康和幸福！

在你们步入龙年的时刻，让我们一起来赞赏华人社会为我们国家所做的诸多贡献，对我们的经济、文化的促进，以及对整个社会的多元丰富给予的付出。当我们筹划未来时，我们必须继续努力地扶持英国华人社会，提高公共生活中代表华人的声音，更要进一步促进整个国家的社群和谐。

借此欢乐的时刻，献上我对你们最热忱的祝福！

埃德·米利班德

2.作为工党资深的政治家，你认为我们应该如何去鼓励更多的华人青年从事和参与政治活动？

由于这届政府草率的政策，青年的失业率和学费都攀升到了历史最高点，我们青年的发展前景每天都趋于暗淡。正如埃德·米利班德如实地指出，本届政府正在违背他们关于下一代会比上一代更好的“英国承诺”。我们比任何时候都更需要通过诸如青年工党和学生工党这样的组织来动员每一个社区和英国每一个地方的青年男女和我们一起推动改变。

最近这个月，我在两个活跃的青年工党活动上作了讲话，所以我能够证明他们的活力和热情，而且他们的会员数量也在很快地增加。在我看来，青年工党将他们的活动关注于青年失业问题，是找准了目标，能够让越来越多的年轻人参与进来。

3.这届政府的经济和移民政策影响到了很多少数民族裔的生意。华人企业在从海外引进技能厨师、草药师和工程师方面尤其如此。下一届的工党政府将怎样来让这些企业感到安全？

英国一直以来是开放的贸易国家，而且为了我们的经济良性发展，保持这一点很重要。有效、公平和平衡的移民政策是成为一个开放贸易国家的重要一环。但是，这届政府粗糙的移民限额制度对移民管理和商业都造成很坏的影响。今后的工党政府需要从自身当政的时期吸取教训，也会清理这届政府的政策将导致的混乱状况。

从更宽的视角来看，现在是商业活动的艰难时期。中小型企业正在艰难度日，这里当然有数以千计的华人中小企业。而这届政府的政策却使得局面更糟而非更好。通过过度且过快的加税和削减开支，他们早在近期的欧元区危机之前就摧毁了商业的信心，让经济毫无生机了。而随着经济增长放缓和失业者的增加，他们也没有让赤字状况如

他们承诺地那样得到好转。这就是为什么我们一直要求这届政府改弦更张，而工党的就业计划之一就是在全国对额外雇用工人的小企业免除保险税收。

4.现在的首相警告非洲国家要警惕中国的“威权资本主义”，说中非关系无法得到长期的持续发展。而在以此侮辱中国的同时，他又使尽解数要中国来英国投资。如果您成为财政大臣，您将如何积极地处理和中国的关系？

英国需要在考虑自身利益和相互尊重的基础上和中国保持稳健和成熟的国家关系。我曾分别以金融时报记者和政府内阁的身份数次访问中国，我亲身感受到每个国家都需要与其他国家合作。为了我们的经济着想，加强我国与中国的关系，让我们的商业能够利用巨大且增长迅速的中国市场所带来的众多商机是非常重要的。

这不意味着我们将做一个不提意见的朋友。在全球范围推动尊重人权的进步一直都是工党重要的外交政策和措施，我们应当以此为荣。但是，我们一定要避免装腔作势和无所事事，因为这会反受其累，也是不成熟的表现。我们不会学大卫·卡梅隆的那一套。

5. 中国是一个重要的贸易伙伴，也是一个世界大国，学习中文将让我们的青年处在更有利的竞争位置，您是否认为我们的学校应当鼓励教授和学习中文？

当然应该。我在上届政府担任教育大臣时就积极地鼓励在小学和中学里教授中文。那时还有一些评论员质疑对中文的推广基于法语和德语是否明智，但今天随着中国成为日益强大的经济体和贸易伙伴，更多的人开始认同：学习中文的青年人将会受益匪浅。

Malaysian Chinese selected as Labour's Parliamentary candidate for Hastings and Rye.

SARAH Owen, whose mother is a Malaysian Chinese and father English, was selected as Labour's Parliamentary Candidate for Hastings and Rye. Born and raised in Hastings and Rye, and a long-time local Labour activist, Sarah is currently political advisor to Lord Alan Sugar, and is helping develop Labour's national small business policy. She also has experience of frontline health care in the NHS and in Emergency Planning with the London Fire Brigade before working in politics.

Sarah says "I'm proud to be selected to build on the work started by Michael Foster and Labour in Hastings and Rye. Right now people feel let down by this Government and I will offer a positive alternative and a genuine commitment to people living in Hastings and Rye."

Sonny Leong, Chair of Chinese for Labour, "We are so proud of Sarah, who is on our Executive Committee, on her selection as PPC for Hastings & Rye. I've seen Sarah at work, she is passionate on social care, the NHS and equality. Watching her mother and her colleagues struggled with poor pay, failing equipment and limited ward budgets means that fighting for a better funded NHS providing universal free care, based on need not money, was and will always be something she will work tirelessly. Her commitment to Hastings and Rye is formidable."

We think she is our first Chinese Labour parliamentary candidate and hopefully our first Chinese Labour Member of Parliament. "

Former Hastings & Rye Labour MP Michael Foster, "I was delighted to be the first ever Labour MP in Hastings & Rye, and I'm delighted that we're now on course for our first woman Labour MP. Sarah will be a real match for Tory MP Amber Rudd, and I look forward to some exciting local campaigning in the months and years ahead."

Vote for Love: Chinese adoptee selected as Labour's candidate

CECILIA Love, a Chinese adoptee has been selected as Labour's candidate in the Riverside Ward in Cardiff for next year's Council election. Cecilia born to Chinese parents was internationally adopted as a baby by an English mother and a Scottish father. A single parent with a daughter, she has been a Labour Party member for several years and has been an active campaigner.

Cecilia says "As a young single mother and an ethnic minority woman growing up in the UK, we are indebted to the previous Labour government; working tax credits, and child care support have enabled me to contribute positively to society. It is this agenda of social justice and equality of outcomes advanced by Labour that is what motivates me to stay engaged in party politics. Where for me equality, is not purely a moral or ethical issue, but rather, my own life experience is evidence to show the long term economic benefits equality brings for society as a whole. "

Sonny Leong, Chair of Chinese for Labour, "Cecilia embodies a typical hard working, no nonsense Chinese. Her values of hard work, aspiration, family and fairness are also Labour values. We are really pleased that you has been selected, and we think is the first Chinese Labour candidate and hopefully the first Chinese Labour elected councillor in Wales."

'Cecilia Love will make an outstanding Labour councillor. She is hard-working, committed and deeply immersed in those issues which matter most in the community she seeks to represent. Her own background will bring an additional dimension to the work of the council and its engagement with the wider communities of Cardiff. I look forward very much to working with her in the future'. Mark Drakeford, Cardiff West Assembly Member commented on her selection.

A simplified Carbon Reduction Commitment – Is it a commitment for the businesses only?

by Winston Mak, Policy Advisor, Green Economics Institute, UK

MANCHESTER United and some 20 top energy performers are shined on the first ever CRC Energy Efficiency Performance League Table, published by the Environment Agency last month. Ricocheting in the minds of many entrepreneurs are the carbon reduction compliance procedures blamed to be overly bureaucratic. In June, the Energy & Climate Change Secretary, Chris Huhne, "listened" to this view and announced details of simplification to the CRC Energy Efficiency Scheme to make it more "business-friendly".

Launched last year, CRC is a mandatory carbon emissions reporting and pricing scheme aimed at tackling barriers to the update of energy efficiency and cutting emissions in large, non-energy-intensive organisations in both private and public sectors, which are responsible for around 10% of the UK's emissions. The policy document principally reviews the private sector organisational rules, CRC supply rules, qualification criteria, overlapping between similar carbon reduction schemes and timing and frequency of allowances sales from 2012 onwards, but a majority of proposed changes would risk weakening the scheme. When our carbon emissions still rose by 3% during a recession-sodden year – 2010, would this 'pure' simplification exercise for the CRC be the right thing to do? Would this become a commitment to businesses rather than to our environment?

The country is set to miss its carbon targets. I do not oppose the scheme being more business-centric, provided that the government can bet on a simplified version stay really true to its intent of decarbonising businesses. Scientists told us an annual decrement of 3% in emissions is necessary to meet the carbon budgets that the UK is legally bound to achieve. Indeed, the UK benefits from clear policy objectives and vibrant economic analyses, while the CRC is the financial tool that is needed but has not yet been developed in the right direction.

Rather than pure simplification, the right direction for the CRC should be gradual intensification to include medium-sized businesses and even charities or NGOs in the third sector as well as progressing to a full cap-and-trade (carbon exchange) scheme in later phases. When interviewed by a magazine earlier, the Climate Change Minister, Greg Barker, said DECC has no plan to expand the CRC to cover smaller businesses, but they should take advantage of the Green Deal which will be open to any business operating out of a non-domestic property when it starts next autumn.

Nevertheless, the design of the Green Deal is arguably weak. Gloom remains over the level of expected take-up and whether it will deliver the scale of change needed to meet the UK's carbon targets. A study suggests that a fine-tuned, non-domestic Green Deal has the potential for incentivising energy efficiency in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). It is estimated that a 10% take-up under the non-domestic version would equate to a £800 million market of energy efficiency measures and around 5% of the carbon savings required from sectors not already included in the EU Emissions Trading Scheme by 2020.

To achieve the carbon budgets, the government need to scale up their ambition with new tools in climate policies which indeed require inter-departmental collaboration, not like the battle involving the Treasury and BIS that happened recently. The Prime Minister should demonstrate strong leadership by committing his whole cabinet and Whitehall in its entirety to the low-carbon transition. Otherwise, his party's promise to be the "greenest ever" government will be no more than a fleeting show
