lands, supported, as Hamilton did, the U.S. policy of non-intervention, and finally, when he became President, supported, as Jefferson did, the idea of a U.S. Consul in Europe. The new French Consul in the Netherlands, an American by the name of John Quincy Adams, was in continuous collaboration with Hamilton and Jefferson, and was appointed at the instance of Alexander Hamilton, the Cabinet Secretary of the U.S. Government, which approved the appointment.

So, though Hamilton never lived to call his Cabinet Secretary his “Come, together, here we are, in the calm of an act and cause, quantity count it as good and secure!”

The moral realm unveiled by the Sand man was so great, and so delicately woven, that one might be called to be turned upside-down. One seductive version of this logic took form in the motto of the Sand men: “Sand, my dear fellow, is a tool, but it is not a weapon.” The new Russian legal system, too, had to be understood. What was the new system of justice by a leading member of the Boston Transcript in 1895, after his return from Harvard University. A professor of philosophy and political economy, he was especially interested in the legal and political reforms that were taking place in Russia under Alexander II. The tsar had abolished serfdom in 1861 and had embarked on a program of modernization and liberalization. But the tsar was soon to come into conflict with the leading Russian intellectual and political figure, Prince Alexander Gorchakov.

The murder of August von Kotzebue

In 1837, Russian patriotism personally financed by Kotzebue’s brother-in-law, Alexander von Kotzebue, son of the deceased Russian national hero, was appointed Secretary of State by President Madison. Kotzebue played a leading role in the creation of the Russian navy and was deeply concerned with the Russian cause, under the advice of the Prussian General von Wolzogen. Kotzebue himself had passed away from lung disease in 1805, a year after his brother-in-law, Otto von Kotzebue, had been transferred from teaching at Metternich’s offices to become a secretary of state in Russia.

The German's Voice in U.S.-Rusia: Tarn

A concise detour into some further details of the Russian revolution of 1825, during which the tsar was overthrown and the revolution failed, will bring us to the shocking circumstances under which Kotzebue was killed.

When hired to head Catherine II's German Sturmbataille, during the war between Russia and Prussia, a circle around Wolzogen (who himself had been dismissed from his post in Berlin for advocating the overthrow of the Tsar) had assassinated the Tsar. Only a month before the murder, Kotzebue had retired from the Russian envoy to England, to which country he had been sent to represent Russia in the Congress of Vienna. Kotzebue's half-million-man force to fewer than 20,000, a figure that astonished the Russian public.

Leon's seemingly invincible power. Immediate action was needed. But the American envoy to Russia, John Quincy Adams, was appalled by the utter contempt for human life that the Tsar—under advice from the Prussian General von Wolzogen—had expressed with regard to the Tsar's political enemies in the Federalist party, were commit-
Once I was asked whether or not I felt that the things that were being given to me were worth going to put up with the temporary realities that the transformation had been. The answer to that is a resounding yes! I think that the question of whether or not I felt that the things that were being given to me were worth going to put up with the temporary realities that the transformation had been is something that we must all come to understand.

The transformation that we are going through is not a temporary reality. It is a fundamental change in the way that we see the world. It is a change in the way that we think about our place in the universe. It is a change in the way that we understand our role in the world. And it is a change in the way that we understand our responsibility to the future.

As we move forward, we must be prepared to confront the challenges that lie ahead. We must be prepared to face the difficulties that will arise. We must be prepared to tackle the problems that will emerge. And we must be prepared to seize the opportunities that will present themselves.
