

The Coming Economic Blowout

Are We Ready for the Next Fight?

The stolen election, and the subsequent January events, which put a pretender and avatar into the Presidency, hit patriots like a Pearl Harbor shock. The intent of the global elite, who orchestrated the 2020-21 coup, was to crush President Trump and to crush our movement. They failed, and as they did after Pearl Harbor, Americans went out and acted. We are more mobilized than ever before, fighting to restore integrity to our elections, to stop the horrors of Critical Race Theory in our schools, to push back against the “green” agenda, to put the Republican Party in the hands of Trump supporters.

We are fighting back, but are we ready for the next shock—the “economic Pearl Harbor”? The Great Reset of the World Economic Forum is being dutifully carried out by the Biden Collective, largely through executive orders and the monopoly power of giant financial institutions and central banks. The continued destruction of our physical economy and massive money-spewing policies of the government and the Federal Reserve have ignited the worst inflation on record. Unchecked, it can lead to hyperinflation. Attempts to check it will blow out the multi-quadrillion-dollar financial bubble.

This has been 50 years in the making and has only been exacerbated by recent actions. The takedown of the Bretton Woods System on August 15, 1971, orchestrated by the City of London, was the first step in the loss of our economic sovereignty, allowing the dollar to become a plaything of speculators, rather than an instrument of sovereign credit. Lyndon LaRouche warned that the continuation of such policies would lead to fascism.

And, here we are. Giant asset-management funds like BlackRock (with assets of nearly $9 trillion) are in league with the Biden Collective, dictating policies of green suicide and wokeness on other corporations and states. BlackRock managed the TARP bailout funds after the 2008 crash, and managed the emergency pandemic funds during the 2020 lockdowns, saving Wall Street and crushing Main Street. News flash: This isn’t socialism—this is corporatism, the Mussolini name for fascism.

This is the next fight. The economic crisis is coming on like a tsunami. There will be a financial disintegration, and the only question is, will we be ready to restore our economic sovereignty with the policies of the American System of Abraham Lincoln and Lyndon LaRouche, or will we allow the parasites to regroup, to maintain their monetarists policies (of both Keynesian and Friedmanite versions) and slam their Great Reset down our throats?

As Abraham Lincoln did, Lyndon LaRouche rediscovered and deepened the principles of the American System and devoted his life to equipping citizens with these very powerful weapons of national economic sovereignty. We must master these policies, and use them to take over the Republican Party, and turn it into the Party of Lincoln, LaRouche, and Donald Trump.

Introduction to Lyndon LaRouche's Four Laws to Save the United States

1. Restore the 1933 Glass-Steagall law which separated commercial banking (banking which takes deposits and makes loans based upon the deposits) from investment banking (banking which ventures capital into various types of investments and speculations). Deposits in commercial banks will again be protected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Investment banks will again be left to their own just rewards. In today's context this means that the Federal Government will no longer assume any responsibility to try to protect the outrageous financial speculative and predatory activities of banks or other finance institutions involved in the financial bubble which continues to suck dry our real physical economy. This begins the process of collapsing the speculative bubble, and the political power of those who use the bubble to control politics inside the United States.

2. Restore the principle of National Banking—as opposed to the principle of private “central banking,” which is the principle upon which the Federal Reserve Bank was established. In the European central-banking model, the central bank issues currency strictly in order to meet the needs (emphatically including the predatory and speculative needs) of its private owners. This places the private owners of the central bank (such as the Federal Reserve Bank) in a position above supposedly sovereign governments because governments must go hat in hand to central banks for credit for any purpose. If you compare the Article 1, Section 8 provision of the U.S. Constitution, stating that only Congress has the power “To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, ...” you discover that the Fed is, in fact, operating outside the law. A new National Bank or similar “credit system” should be authorized by Congress to emit credit for authorized purposes up to limits periodically set by Congress.

3. The National Bank will operate upon the “credit system” principle. This principle was best illustrated in the actions of the First and Second National Banks of the United States, the Lincoln greenback policy, and the activities of Franklin Roosevelt's Reconstruction Finance Corporation under Chairman Jesse H. Jones. In general, this means that any person, institution, or governmental body with an idea or project which would be of potential value to society if successfully carried out, can apply to a local bank for a long-term, low-interest loan. If the local bank can be convinced of the potential viability of the project and the borrower, the local bank applies to the national bank to loan the borrower the bulk of the needed capital. This process typically does not entail handing over large sums to the borrower, but the establishment of a line of credit at the bank through which the borrower pays out the costs of building the borrower's project over the life of its construction, until the point that the project begins to earn a profit by which the loan then begins to be paid off. Every nation where such a credit system has been implemented—whether in the United States, Germany, or China—has seen its success, including great profit to the issuing bank.

4. While much of the credit issued will be directed toward necessary but rather mundane projects like homebuilding, water systems, etc., two central projects will pull upward the productivity across all sections of the economy at rapid rates: the project to colonize the Moon and Mars begun with President Donald Trump's Artemis Project, and the fulfillment of the necessary precondition for Mars colonization—the successful development of thermonuclear fusion for propulsion and power. In fact, solving every problem associated with colonization of the Moon and Mars will pull upward every aspect of the economy back on Earth, from agriculture, to construction, to medicine, etc.
