

Resolution to Re-Americanize the U.S. Economy

The following resolution is being circulated nation-wide for endorsements by constituency groups and leaders, including student groups, elected officials, city councils, county boards, state legislatures, clergy members, business owners, trade unions, and any other similar groupings or individuals.

Globalization has failed. We are calling for a return to the American System of Political Economy.

From construction companies to local restaurants, grocery stores to manufacturing centers, the breakdown of supply chains has exposed the failed economic policies of the past two generations. Efforts to address this crisis with more of the same failed policies have unleashed major waves of inflation and the danger of hyperinflation.

Decades of globalization and “Green New Deal”-type policies have devolved the U.S. economy from a productive power into a shell of its former self. Our national sovereignty has been eroded, leaving our population to live in conditions shaped by private forces outside the control of our elected representatives. Communities built on productive enterprises are being devastated, the most fundamental aspects of society are reliant on global supply chains, and pride in producing physical wealth has been replaced by the glorification of financial speculation.

We will not save the economy by printing and distributing money, nor by throttling all government activity and relying on the magic of the marketplace. Therefore, we are calling for a rejection of the failed doctrines of globalization, monetarism, and radical environmentalism, and a return to the economic principles which built our nation into a great productive power:

In short, we are calling for a return to the American System of Political Economy. After it was nearly forgotten, Lyndon LaRouche resurrected and advanced the American System and Donald Trump became the first President in generations to publicly advocate for its return. The core principles of the American System were originally outlined by Alexander Hamilton, and the system was famously implemented to help save our nation from great crises by Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt.

At the heart of the American System is the principle that wealth does not come from money, but that true wealth comes from developing and utilizing the creativity which exists in every human being. Great progressive leaps in science and technology serve the pursuit of happiness by an expanding population which lives to create a better future.

Therefore, the role of the government, in shaping monetary, banking, and trade policy, must be driven by the overarching mission to increase physical productivity and create growth that will support future generations at higher living standards. This includes:

- Protecting technologically progressive manufacturing and agriculture against unfair competition from globalist exploitation of cheap labor.
- Developing advanced infrastructure systems, starting with new energy, water, and transportation systems to increase the potential for productive private enterprise.
- Pushing the frontiers of science and technology, led by fusion and space technologies.
- Taxation, financial and monetary regulation, and credit policies to accomplish these ends.

With American System policies we can build our way out of the present crisis. This is the outlook that built our nation, it's an American outlook, and it's how we'll free ourselves from the disaster of globalization and reshape our economy today.

Take back our economic future by gathering endorsements from constituency groups and leaders across the nation. Let us know what you're doing or how you can help:
