

Seàn Bennett

For International Officer

Who am I?

I'm a British/German writer, editor and producer based in the East of England and specialising in political analysis and commentary. Politics has always been an important part of my life and, in 2015, I was lucky enough to undertake a short work experience placement at the British Embassy in Vienna, Austria. In 2019 I graduated with a degree in International Relations and Politics from the UEA. During my studies I campaigned for the Liberal Democrats in the European and General elections of 2019, as well as standing as a candidate for Norwich City Council that same year. I have run a politics blog and educational website called The Political Abyss since 2016 and am currently serving as Managing Editor of Katoikos.world, an online publication owned by the Foundation for Global Governance and Sustainability (FOGGS) in Brussels.

Why me?

From a very young age, I was surrounded by international politics and governance. I grew up around diplomats, embassies, and international organisations, learning more and more about the intricacies of global political systems with each passing year. Politics on an international scale is not only an important part of my work with FOGGS, but it also makes up a massive part of my personal projects and family life. As a multinational gay man, understanding the state of borders, treaties, and international relations is vital for my personal safety, so I am meticulous about keeping up to date and informed.

As International Officer, I would work closely with European and global counterparts, building relationships that show the YL commitment to international cooperation and collaboration.

I would utilise my various contacts to try and secure interviews, experiences, and training for YL members, as well as propose an exchange scheme whereby UK young liberals and international liberal youth would be able to experience life and political work in each other's countries.

I would commit myself to assisting any and all branches of the party in international matters, and would focus on building strong and long-lasting international relations for the YLs, laying the foundations for long-term partnerships and comprehensive foreign policy.

Vote for Seàn Bennett

Email — sean.writing27@gmail.com

Facebook - @sbwriter / @thepoliticalabyss

Website - www.seanbennettwriter.com
www.thepoliticalabyss.com

Seàn Bennett For International Officer

Who am I?

I'm a British/German writer, editor and producer based in the East of England and specialising in political analysis and commentary. Politics has always been an important part of my life and, in 2015, I was lucky enough to undertake a short work experience placement at the British Embassy in Vienna, Austria. In 2019 I graduated with a degree in International Relations and Politics from the UEA. During my studies I campaigned for the Liberal Democrats in the European and General elections of 2019, as well as standing as a candidate for Norwich City Council that same year. I have run a politics blog and educational website called The Political Abyss since 2016 and am currently serving as Managing Editor of Katoikos.world, an online publication owned by the Foundation for Global Governance and Sustainability (FOGGS) in Brussels.

Why me?

From a very young age, I was surrounded by international politics and governance. I grew up around diplomats, embassies, and international organisations, learning more and more about the intricacies of global political systems with each passing year. Politics on an international scale is not only an important part of my work with FOGGS, but it also makes up a massive part of my personal projects and family life. As a multinational gay man, understanding the state of borders, treaties, and international relations is vital for my personal safety, so I am meticulous about keeping up to date and informed.

As International Officer, I would work closely with European and global counterparts, building relationships that show the YL commitment to international cooperation and collaboration.

I would utilise my various contacts to try and secure interviews, experiences, and training for YL members, as well as propose an exchange scheme whereby UK young liberals and international liberal youth would be able to experience life and political work in each other's countries.

I would commit myself to assisting any and all branches of the party in international matters, and would focus on building strong and long-lasting international relations for the YLs, laying the foundations for long-term partnerships and comprehensive foreign policy.

Email— sean.writing27@gmail.com

Facebook - @sbwriter / @thepoliticalabyss

Website - www.seanbennettwriter.com / www.thepoliticalabyss.com