Denver Campaign on the Move

Two Libertarians campaigning for seats on the Denver Election Commission are running active campaigns that have put them out in front of their competitors. Doug Anderson, who has served on the Commission since being elected in 1987, and Mike Zink, in his first try for elective office, are working toward victory in the 21 May nonpartisan election.

The Denver Election Commission is a unique institution that runs elections in the City and County of Denver. (Elections in all other counties are run by the County Clerk and Recorder.) It has three members: two elected, and one appointed by the Mayor.

The race for Election Commission normally does not get as much attention as the races for Mayor and for members of the City Council which are held at the same time, and there are likely to be several controversial measures on the reports; apparently they have either not raised any money, or are failing to comply with the reporting law.)

same time, and there are likely to be several controversial measures on the May ballot this year as well, but Anderson and Zink have already received mention in the Denver Post, Rocky Mountain News, Colorado Statesman, and Westword.

AZTEC '91, the candidates' joint campaign committee, is hard at work on petitioning, fundraising, and media rela-

Bryant, Carol Steinheimer, Thane Eichenauer, and Ron Bain.

Another promising sign is that the committee has been able to raise over $6,000 in contributions. Only two other candidates for this office have so far filed campaign finance reports, and the amounts they reported were significantly less than the amounts raised for Anderson and Zink. (Seven other people have taken out petitions, but have not filed raised any money, or are failing to comply with the reporting law.)

Anderson and Zink are basing their campaigns on several issues relating to the conduct and management of elections in Denver. They call for continued reduction of the expenses of the Election Commission through staff attrition and increased modernization and computerization, a process which Anderson has been pushing during his current term.

Both candidates oppose the traditional type of "campaign reform" legislation, calling a recent product of the City Council a "feel good" bill that allows Council members to claim credit for "reform" without solving any real problem. As alternative approaches to bring a more grass-roots flavor to city politics, the Libertarian candidates have proposed term limitations, like the ones recently

LP Offers "Letter to Your Rep" on New "900" Line

A new "900" line, sponsored by the national Libertarian Party, is offering libertarians and other interested individuals a "letter-to-your-representative" service and a variety of information about the LP.

Callers to 1-900-4-LIBERTY have the opportunity to request, after hearing the letter summarized, that the letter be sent to their congressperson in their name. The letter's topic will be changed at least monthly to reflect issues of timely concern. The current letter urges Congress to push for a speedy withdrawal of U.S. troops from the Middle East, opposing a long-term occupying presence there.

In addition to the letter service, the LP "900" number offers callers a "Legislative Hotline", which summarizes pending legislation of particular interest to libertarians, along with suggestions on what callers can do about it.

Callers can also receive information on current LP activities and projects, updates on Libertarian campaigns and ballot access efforts, and membership information.

Calls to the "900" number cost $1.95 per minute, charged to the caller's phone bill.

From the Editor

In the chart to the right are listed the names of some very important people, a sort of CLP Honor Roll. Indeed, they are the very reason for the organization's existence. They are Libertarians who, over the course of the last two decades, have stepped forward to run for public office.

These people, fewer than one hundred brave individuals, have really been the ones to define the Libertarian Party in the minds of most voters. It is what they said that the voters have heard, it is their behavior on which the Party's reputation rests. It is their act of putting themselves before voters that distinguishes the Libertarian Party from other libertarian organizations – what makes us a political party.

It is an important responsibility, and one that they took on in many cases with minimal help from others. It is they who sacrificed their time, their privacy, and their money to bring the Libertarian message to the voters of Colorado, while many others who professed the same beliefs were content with the role of spectator. In too many cases, these candidates were left to do basically the whole job – from petitioning to paying the bills – themselves. And I'm sure many of them never heard even "thank you" from their fellow Libertarians when the election was over.

So, I would like to take this opportunity to thank our candidates, both those listed in the chart who led the way and gave the Party meaning through those years, and those who are carrying on the tradition today.

So far, three Colorado Libertarians have stepped foward as candidates this year: Doug Anderson and Mike Zink in Denver, and Thane Eichenauer in Lakewood. And, of course, two well-known Libertarians have volunteered to take on the most demanding campaign effort of all – running for President. Regardless of which receives the nomination, there is little question that by the time we meet in Chicago, both Dick Boddie and Andre Marrou will have through their campaigns already contributed more to building the LP than almost anyone who has not been a candidate.

Not all of us can be candidates. Some of us volunteer to help in a candidate's campaign. Some work to keep the Party infrastructure intact so each campaign doesn't have to start from scratch. These too are important jobs, and the people who do them often also make large and unrecognized contributions of time and funds. But without candidates we just wouldn't be a political party.

As the editor of this newsletter, there is nothing I would like to see more than lots of candidates filling up its

Become a monthly pledger and help the Libertarian Party grow!

The Colorado Libertarian Party depends entirely on voluntary contributions to pay the expenses of publishing the CLiPboard, maintaining an office, and mailing information to prospective members.

Membership dues and subscriptions cover part of this cost, but only part – without additional contributions we cannot continue our program of reaching out to new people to make the LP grow.

Please consider making a regular monthly contribution. Pledges of $5 or more per month include automatic renewal of state and national dues.

shown to be popular at the state level, and moving city elections to the fall to allow candidates to "press the flesh" during the summer festival season, rather than having to raise so much money for TV advertising. They also call for other reforms, such as easier voter registration, to encourage voter participation.

During his current term, Anderson has been in public view as various election-related controversies have hit the news. Most recently, when the Commission voted to throw out thousands of signatures on a referendum petition for frivolous reasons, and to call in large numbers of voters for hearings to verify they petition signatures, Anderson was the sole dissenting vote.

Anderson, a professional bartender, has carried through with his 1987 campaign promise to give away most of his salary as a Commissioner – almost $25,000 over the four years – to charities and worthy causes. Anderson says his long term goal remains the elimination of the Election Commission, but that will require an amendment to the city charter.

JeffCo LP Targets Neighborhoods

Jefferson County Libertarians, having examined precinct-by-precinct voting results for the 1990 races for Governor and for Sheriff, have decided to explore various options for reaching out to voters in areas where the Libertarian candiates did better than average.

Plotting above-average precincts on a map, four specific areas were targeted for further work. The highest percentages for David Aitken were found in the southern end of the county, a large area with low population density. For this area, the only practical means of contact appears to be direct mail, and the first outreach project to be undertaken was a special mailing of the February CLiPboard to about 800 unaffiliated voters who voted in 1990. Mailing labels for these households were obtained from the Jefferson County election department.

Two other areas were identified where local community newspapers may be able to reach likely prospects. Members are currently researching the costs of an advertising campaign using this method.

Finally, one concentration of voters is being examined for possible door to door canvassing. Tentative plans are to put together a packet which would include material introducing the LP, possibly literature relating to a popular issue such as tax limitation or educational choice, and an "instant membership card" to make it simple for interested voters to contact us.

Jefferson County members are also exploring the possibility of other political projects, such as a tax-relatated initiative. Meanwhile, Thane Eichenauer continues his campaign for a seat on the Lakewood City Council.

Party News

Brief Filed in Heid Suit

The lawsuit initiated last fall in an attempt to place Robin Heid on the ballot for Governor continues to make its way through the court system, even though the election is over.

The issue in the case is whether the state may restrict a party's choice of candidate by imposing membership requirements more strict than the party's own. Because Heid did not qualify as a Libertarian according to the state's rules, the Secretary of State refused to put his name on the ballot.

The LP's brief in an appeal of a lower court ruling that upheld the Secretary's action was filed with the Colorado Supreme Court 13 February, and it is expected that a hearing will be held and a decision issued later this year.

latest figures, Colorado ranks 6th:

state	members/million pop.
Alaska	152.2
New Hampshire	144.5
Maine	84.3
Nevada	77.1
California	75.4
Colorado	72.3
Oregon	65.9
Vermont	63.7
New Mexico	59.1

The national average is 37.5, which means Colorado is about "twice as Libertarian" as the country as a whole. But the top two states have about twice that! Are people in Alaska and New Hampshire really more libertarian than people in Colorado? Or are LP membrs there just trying harder to get their neighbors to join the LP?

If you know someone who has libertarian views but isn't yet a dues-paying member, why not give him or her the convenient toll free number 800-682-1776? The national office will send introductory material and a membership form. Surely we should be able to do at least as well as California!

Remember also that the smallest minority on earth is the individual. Those who deny individual rights cannot claim to be defenders of minorities.

LIBERTY TRIUMPHANT
1991 PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTION
NATIONAL LIBERTARIAN PARTY
Thursday Aug. 29 - Sunday Sept. 1, 1991

On Chicago's Magnificent Mile
Downtown Chicago Marriott
540 N. Michigan Ave.
Chicago, IL

$89 per night for single/double occupancy with safes and irons in every room, as well as health club and swimming pool privileges. Parking is available in nearby lots (separate charge).

Located at the center of Chicago, with world-class shopping and museums, the beautiful Lakefront, and public transportation all nearby. (You can even take public transportation to and from O'Hare Airport, Union Station, and the Greyhound Bus terminal.)

Chicago remains the hub of America's transportation systems. United Airlines calls Chicago home; we're at Amtrak's crossroads; U.S. Interstates 80 & 90 run through the city--but watch for rush hour gridlock...or take a tramp steamer down the St. Lawrence Seaway and across Lake Michigan!

Traveling with an apolitical mate or children? They won't be bored. We mentioned the shopping and the museums (there's hundreds: The Museum of Science & Industry; The Art Institute; Ukrainian and Polish and Judaic Museums; The Museum of Broadcasting, etc.), but Chicago also has walking tours for architectural buffs (Louis Sullivan, Helmut Jahn, Frank Lloyd Wright, anyone?), dozens of theatres (see where David Mamet rose to fame), the Cubs and the White Sox, some of the best Blues clubs in the country.

Plus, the world-famous Chicago International JazzFest, and, for sci-fi fans, 1991 WorldCon also happen over Labor Day!

Convention Doings
If we can keep you near the hotel, we've got plenty to do on the convention floor, too:

- Nomination of 1992 Presidential Candidates
- Election of National Party Officers
- Platform Debates
- Nationally-known speakers
- New, expanded Exhibit Hall

Special Events
As though the above isn't special enough!

Wednesday: Celebration of the Bill of Rights/Platinum Anniversary of the Libertarian Party Party. Heartland Institute Reception and Dinner*

Thursday: A Taste of Chicago with the Second City Touring Company

Friday: "City of Clout" Tour with a stop at Chicago's JazzFest

Who defends your right to keep 100% of what you earn?

Libertarians believe that you have the right to keep what you earn—that taking people's earnings from them forcibly, through taxation, is wrong and counter-productive. Public services are best provided by the free market and voluntary charitable organizations.
