What does it take to have a healthy environment, good transportation, thriving businesses and a high quality of life for Marylanders? Governor Martin O’Malley says it takes smart land use planning.

For years the State has urged Smart Growth principles, but a comprehensive approach is now being taken through the Maryland Department of Planning called Plan Maryland.

Plan Maryland is an ambitious project intended to guide and coordinate Smart Growth planning in Maryland. It is an outgrowth of the 2009 Smart, Green and Growing legislative package containing 12 visions for smart growth proposed by Governor O’Malley and adopted by the Maryland Legislature. The League of Women Voters of Maryland supported this package.

“We need to grow smart,” says MDP Secretary Richard Hall. In the next 25 years, Maryland’s population will grow by a million people. Currently, three-fourths of new building takes place outside of smart growth areas—resulting in a unit taking eight times more land area, according to Secretary Hall.

In the summer of 2009, Maryland hired a consultant to interview business owners, developers, environmentalists, housing advocates and concerned citizen organizations. The interviews served as background for further information gathering. The League of Women Voter’s President Nancy Soreng was interviewed in this phase of the Plan’s development.

Soreng also attended an open-house session in College Park in June where the public was invited to examine the Draft Plan with State officials offering information and gathering comments from attendees.

“The vision that has been developed for statewide sustainable development that protects critical natural resources is impressive.” Soreng says, adding, “The challenge will be to achieve buy-in of this vision by local governments who have traditionally seen land-use planning as a local prerogative.”

The College Park session was one of eight evening open houses held in college gymnasiums and halls throughout the State, from Frostburg to La Plata, as part of a 120-day comment period during May and June of this year.

The comment period extends to September 1. The draft will then be refined into a final plan and submitted to the Governor by Hall. Although the schedule of open houses has been completed, the full Draft Plan with charts and maps is on the web site at plan.maryland.gov, and comments may be made through the site. Presidents and representatives from 40 states and the Virgin Islands gathered south of Washington D.C. from June 17 through June 20 for the League of Women Voters of the United States bi-annual Executive Council. They adopted a budget for the following year, discussed advocacy strategies, and planned projects for election year 2012. They also discussed how the League of Women Voters can use new media to spread its message.

Three Maryland League members working in consultation with LWVUS experts on media, membership, and fundraising drafted a plan for funding and advertising the Vote411 on-line Voters’ Guide. This dynamic Internet tool enables voters to input their address and download information about all of the candidates and ballot questions that they will be voting for. Voters can create a printout of their choices to take to their polling place. Using the Vote411 software, LWVMD will be able to provide information for all voters in the state even in the few jurisdictions where there is no local League. The Vote411 Voters’ Guide also provides information about the offices for which candidates will be vying. The League’s Voters’ Guides are the best way for voters to directly compare candidates’ answers on questions about important issues. The League asks the questions and the candidates’ answers are published exactly as they write them.

The goal of the LWVMD plan is to raise enough money to buy into the Vote411 software, but more importantly to make sure that voters around the state are aware of this valuable resource that will help them make decisions on the candidates and the ballot questions.

Being a productive citizen

By Carol Blackburn

Annette Funn credits a high school teacher in Prince George’s County for her involvement in the community. That teacher stressed the importance of her students becoming productive citizens, Annette said.

After college, Annette said she researched a number of organizations, and saw the League as a way to get involved in the community. “I was very active in Prince George’s County and held all the offices except treasurer,” she said. Her involvement with the League began in 1969. “I was interested in voters service and international trade issues.”

Annette and her husband, Malcolm, lived in Prince George’s County for about 30 years. She was a scientist, he was an attorney, and both belonged to a number of organizations and committees. Besides the League, Annette was a member and, in 1987, state president of the Business and Professional Women. Upon retirement the Funns moved to Chesapeake Beach in Calvert County, an area where Malcolm had grown up.

Annette said that when she went into register to vote in Calvert County one of the women, League member Barbara Fetterhoff, asked if she was interested in joining the League of Women Voters. “It was fate,” Annette said.

In the Calvert County League, Annette has chaired a number of studies, been co-president twice, and has been a delegate to a number of National League conventions. She recently helped organize the State League convention in Solomons.

Annette was a member of the LWVMD Board of Directors for two years where she worked with the liaisons to the individual county leagues.

In addition to her League activities, Annette is one of the co-founders of the Concerned Black Women of Calvert County. “I found that when I went to hearings there were no African Americans,” she said. She and co-founder Doris Cammack-Spencers decided that more attention should be paid to improving the quality of life for the county’s minority residents, particularly young residents.

Annette is also a commissioner on the Calvert County Commission for Women, a member of the Calvert County chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and serves on several judiciary committees by appointment of the governor.

She and her husband were recently named a “Power Couple” in Calvert County by the local newspaper.

Besides their many separate activities, both Funns are involved in groups together as well as being active in their church. They also have a son, Kelby.

“The League has been a wonderful and positive experience,” Annette said.
The Power of the Vote

Summary of speech given by LWVUS Liaison to Maryland Leagues Dianne Wheatley-Giliotti at the LWVVMD Convention in May 2011

Ninety-one years ago this August, the Nineteenth Amendment was ratified, and millions of women got the power of the vote—almost. The simple language of that amendment did not, in any way, guarantee women the tools they needed to fully exercise that power, nor did those words sweep away the remaining legal barriers to the full exercise of that power.

Getting the right to vote was meaningless if women did not register and go to the polls; it was pointless if women registered and voted without understanding the issues. And understanding the issues and voting matters only if civic engagement continues to the accountability phase.

The Nineteenth Amendment may have been the single most important step to full participation, but it was still just a step. Finishing the fight for the power of the vote was and remains the mission of the League of Women Voters.

But what does that mission entail?

1. Finding and eliminating legal barriers to voting
2. Educating new voters on the political process
3. Registering new voters
4. Providing nonpartisan voter information
5. Using the power of the vote to hold elected officials accountable

To ensure that the 2012 election serves the voters, the League is instituting “The Power of the Vote” campaign.

Over this past year we’ve seen increasing levels of blind partisanship; too often, it seems, candidates and elected officials are looking only to the next election and their chance for partisan advantage rather than thinking about what’s good for the country. The arguments in our legislatures focus instead on the most divisive way to make an emotion-laden appeal. People are yelling at each other, refusing to listen, attacking the motives and the patriotism of their “enemies.”

During the 2010 election the League was attacked, so as we approach 2012 what do we do? Do we attack back? OR do we roll up our sleeves and get back to the basics—that the individual vote is only powerful if it is informed and exercised.

We have the ability to effect change at all three levels of government. But we can only do this by helping each other to re-emphasize our non partisanship and the ways in which our education and advocacy is necessary to, and a product of, the power of the vote.

Be active and visible in your community registering voters; work with us on Vote411 to provide candidate information online to the voters; and keep up the good work in protecting the voter.

Maryland Leagues begin LWVUS Membership and Leadership Development Program

by Betsy Sexton, LWVMD Membership Chair

On July 23 and 24 about 20 Maryland League members will attend training in the LWVUS Membership and Leadership Development Program. The three state coaches, Alison Carney, Roberta Safer and Sue Garonzik, four LWVMD board members and membership teams from the Prince George’s County MAL Unit and Anne Arundel, Baltimore City, Baltimore County, Harford County and Washington County Leagues will be learning best practices for strengthening the Leagues.

States that are currently implementing the LWVUS coaching program report increased membership and visibility, focused strategic planning for organizational growth and improved relationships with the media and other community organizations. Maryland’s enthusiastic and committed volunteers are ready to go!
