The Importance of Open Space in Inner Suburbs and Cities

BARBARA HOPKINS

Wednesday, September 29, at noon

Vibrant communities need open space for recreation and protecting public health and the environment. Barbara Hopkins will discuss how natural areas, gardens, trails and parks improve our lives. These open areas protect habitats, increase air and water quality, enhance community cohesion, and raise home and business values.

Barbara Hopkins, a lawyer and landscape architect, is the executive director of NeighborSpace, Baltimore County. This nonprofit works with local communities to protect and improve their open spaces. She also serves as board president of the Friends of Maryland's Olmsted Parks and Landscapes and chair of the Baltimore County Green Alliance. You can read her blog on growing small nonprofits at <https://www.choosetoimprove.org>.
