Senator Cory A. Booker Biography

Cory Booker has spent his entire career running at the toughest challenges and bringing people together to accomplish things others said were impossible. And for the last 6 years as New Jersey's Senator, he's done the impossible in a broken Washington: he's brought people together to deliver real results for New Jerseyans.

In 1996, Cory moved to Newark, New Jersey, to provide legal services for low-income families, and to help tenants take on slumlords, improve their living conditions, and stay in their homes. At age twenty-nine, Cory was elected to the Newark City Council, and beginning in 2006, he served as Newark's mayor for more than seven years.

In 2013, Cory became the first African-American elected to the US Senate from New Jersey. In the Senate, Cory has advanced economic opportunity and equal justice -- including leading efforts to reform our broken criminal justice system, increase wages and ensure hard work is fairly rewarded, spur economic development and create jobs, and protect the rights of all Americans to breathe clean air and drink clean water.

In the past six years, Cory has delivered for New Jerseyans on some of the most pressing issues facing our state, including advancing critical infrastructure projects like the Gateway tunnels under the Hudson River, helping New Jersey families recover from Superstorm Sandy, delivering much-needed resources to our first responders, and strengthening our state's military installations. He secured tens of millions of dollars in funding to help fix the lead crisis in Newark, New Jersey's largest city and his home for the past 20 years. And he helped create landmark incentives that draw new economic investment into communities across our state that need it most.

From taking on the NRA to stop the scourge of gun violence in our communities, to fighting for economic changes that lift up those who have been struggling and deliver opportunity for all, to protecting and expanding health coverage for New Jerseyans and fighting to drive down healthcare costs, Cory will keep working make justice and opportunity real for every New Jerseyan in the Senate.
