Asylum seeker children to leave Nauru

The final four asylum seeker children currently on Nauru will leave with their families for the United States, the Prime Minister has announced. However, the move is yet to be finalised.

In a joint statement with immigration minister David Coleman, Prime Minister Scott Morrison said that the move vindicated the government's approach.

“We have got all the children Labor put in detention centres out, and we have shut down all the detention centres Labor opened, including on Christmas Island,” Mr Morrison said.

Katharine Murphy
@murpharoo

We've got the kids off Nauru, David Coleman says, while confirming four more kids remain, and will stay until the Americans follow through with an agreement to take them #nuances #auspol
Matt Darvas is Micah Australia's Campaign Director. Mr Darvas welcomed the announcement.

“When the Prime Minister took office in August last year there were 109 children still on Nauru and today this announcement means the final four and their families will be removed."

“This has been an extraordinary campaign, led by Australia’s humanitarian and refugee sector with many thousands across the country raising their voice on behalf of these children."

“It has been incredible to watch the momentum build in churches and in the public, and it’s proof that when we raise our voice together, change can happen.”

Many prominent Christian leaders have spoken out on the issue. A broad coalition of church groups joined the Kids Off Nauru campaign in hosting prayer vigils and lobbying politicians.

Love Makes A Way’s Matt Anslow was ambivalent about the announcement.

“When there’s no children left on Nauru — and not before — then I’ll offer congratulations,” Dr Anslow said.

“But certainly not to the government. All they’ve done is to finally heed the words of advocates, doctors, lawyers, churches, the UN, every human rights body, and basically any decent person. They’ve finally caved to public pressure, just in time for the lead up to the election.”

Dr Anslow suggested that others should be congratulated should the move take place, including those who had struggled for the children’s release.

“I’m torn between celebration and despair at the government’s supremely cynical attempt to claim credit.”

The move comes after court rulings that the government must bring the children to Australia for medical treatment and amidst speculation that the government was facing defeat on the floor of parliament over the issue of medical transfers.

As recently as November the Australian news media reported on the issue.
Asylum seeker children to leave Nauru

Jonathan Foye is Insights’ Editor

Prime Minister Morrison said that the children would return to Nauru once their medical treatment had finished.

New Textbook Explores Australian and Indian Perspectives on Eco-theology

Uniting Church Members to Join Climate Change Rally

Related Articles
Leave a Reply

Your email address will not be published. Required fields are marked *

Comment

Name *

Email *

Website

Save my name, email, and website in this browser for the next time I comment.
Asylum seeker children to leave Nauru | Insights Magazine

Insights, the magazine of the Uniting Church in Australia’s Synod of New South Wales and the ACT tells the story of the church to Uniting Church members. Insights keeps people informed. It gets people talking. It builds community.

Gary Mexted on Artist Doris Golder recognised in Queen’s Birthday honours

Neil Ericksson on The Cross and the Turnbuckle

Simon Long on Julia Baird, Andrew Bolt clash over church abuse reporting

Bob Hinchcliffe on The Meaning of Miracles

Kevin Edwards on Notre Dame, Holy Week 2019

Peter Powell on What is the resurrection?

Insights Magazine on The Cross and the Turnbuckle

John Squires on The Cross and the Turnbuckle

Rob Rutzou on Easter is an experience, not a theory

Ian Stehbens on Q&A with Dr Anthony Rees

Warren Bird on Mary Magdeline to release in American cinemas

Peter Stanton Managing Director 105.1LifeFM Bendigo. on Vale John Smith