Dear Money Smart Week Partners,

Congratulations on another successful Money Smart Week. By offering educational activities and promoting the event, your involvement helped thousands of people across the U.S. learn to make more informed decisions about their personal finances.

Consider the numbers: 184,532 participants taking advantage of more than 4,800 events and activities in all 50 states. Statistics like these confirm the power of partnerships and grassroots networks where ideas, best practices and resources are shared.

Your combined efforts have created an inviting environment for people to take advantage of the many resources available to them. I thank you for everything you do to make Money Smart Week one of the most impactful financial education campaigns in the nation. Please enjoy this report showcasing best practices and highlights in 2015.

Sincerely,

Charles L. Evans
President & Chief Executive Officer
Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago
What is Money Smart Week?
Money Smart Week® is a financial education campaign offering thousands of programs, classes and activities to consumers of all ages. These educational events are carried out by financial institutions, non-profit groups, government agencies, schools, libraries and more. The week showcases these organizations’ educational resources, strengthens private-public partnerships, engages the media, and connects community members with those who can help them learn how to better manage their money. The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago coordinates the effort because individuals and communities benefit when consumers are making informed decisions about their personal finances.

2015 Campaign Snapshot
Money Smart Week 2015 featured more than 4,500 events and registered partners as well as 184,532 consumer participants/attendees across the country. In the 14th year of the program, these numbers represent enormous growth from the inaugural campaign in 2002, which was limited to a city-based effort in Chicago including 40 events.

Much of the activity is concentrated in the Midwest where groups of partner organizations have formed planning teams throughout several states to concentrate event offerings and promotion to local residents. Using resources made available by the Chicago Fed and a campaign model as a guide, these local groups take a grass roots approach to bring Money Smart Week to their communities. Often rolled up into a larger statewide campaign, each planning team meets independently, determines the scope of their efforts, develops a communication plan and executes the events/activities. This type of hyper-local approach and ‘ownership’ of the campaign by the partners has proven highly effective. Currently, eighteen states have developed one or more (sometime up to a few dozen) planning teams under this model.

A major factor in contributing to the spread of Money Smart Week around the country has been national partnerships with the American Library Association, the Financial Planners Association, Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and USDA Cooperative Extension. These groups encourage their members to participate and offer events during the scheduled week which led to activity in all 50 states. As members increase their participation and other national partnerships are formed, the goal will be to create a two-tiered structure where national partners and community based planning teams work together for more consistent partner involvement between states.
A hallmark for Money Smart Week is its diversity of partners and programming. With thousands of unique organizations taking part, the list of target audiences and offerings ranges greatly from kids to seniors and simple money concepts to advanced wealth building strategies. Beyond variety among audiences and topics, Money Smart Week partners are incredibly savvy on reaching consumers through several mediums and platforms. While most events are classroom style, technology is allowing for more online activity including webinars, tele-town halls, mobile app contests and information sharing through social media. In all, the combined effort of the volunteer educators and participating organizations fuels the effectiveness and success of this multi-faceted financial literacy campaign.

1. The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City—Denver Branch offers a Career Day with the help of Junior Achievement.
Youth and family events are a significant part of Money Smart Week. Each year, partners reach tens of thousands of kids through schools, libraries, community centers, museums and more. Educational programming spans pre-K through high school and seeks to shape positive attitudes about money. In addition to classroom instruction, kids are exposed to a wide variety of activities including story time at libraries and bookstores, essay contests, interactive ‘real world’ simulations and electronic gaming.

1. Being Money Smart never comes too early for these young participants in Lansing, MI.
Money Smart Week relies heavily on a grassroots and multi-organization approach to promotion. While the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago provides some overall media and promotional material support, most of the marketing and advertising is coordinated at the local level. Individual partners and planning teams in each state use standardized artwork and talking points created by the Chicago Fed to then design their own advertisements, fliers, press releases and more. As highlighted in the media section of this report, social media is also a critical component of the overall promotional campaign and used heavily by partnering organizations.

1. Hawaii State Library promotes a session featuring young entrepreneurs.
Media play a key role in the success of Money Smart Week. As a critical means of mass communication, media engaged to help spread the word about the effort and the importance of financial education to their viewers, readers and listeners. Their involvement ranges from a single feature story to a whole week’s worth of coverage. In some cases, individual reporters and columnists with a passion for financial education serve as ambassadors and spokespersons through multiple media channels. Further, the changing media landscape and technology have given rise to social media which allows partners to communicate directly to their constituents providing an unparalleled grassroots approach to media.

1. Illinois Money Smart Week State Chair Karen Chan talks with local media at the Rockford, IL kickoff event.
Money Smart Week is measured in a variety of ways. The most common data sets captured year-to-year include the number of partners, events and attendance. As Money Smart Week grows, new partnerships are formed, state coalitions are built and consumers are offered a more diverse slate of programming. Surveys are also distributed and collected at events to capture demographics, marketing trends and program satisfaction. This section highlights Money Smart Week's success and impact.
Money Smart Week began in Chicago in 2002 as a city based campaign with 40 events. Other Midwestern cities in the Chicago Fed’s 7th District joined the effort in the years to follow with cities and states from across the country coming onboard in the last several years. This graph blends the concentration of partner and event totals in each state.
Planning teams are regional/statewide groups of partners that focus on local activities and promotion. Standard teams include coalitions that operate under the Money Smart Week national brand while sister campaigns are early adaptors that modeled their campaigns after Money Smart Week before a national infrastructure was in place. National partners hold separate, individual events and activities in states without planning teams.

Partnerships are paramount to the success of Money Smart Week. From the campaign’s inception, the ideas of sharing best practices, leveraging resources and collectively promoting financial education have been fundamental attributes of the effort. Over the years, partners have exhibited extraordinary passion and dedication to Money Smart Week through their volunteerism, quality programing and creative outreach. This section showcases the power of those partnerships with national and statewide lists acknowledging their contributions as well as the depth and breadth of this amazing effort.

National Partners

Money Smart Week has experienced tremendous growth across the U.S. the past few years. Much of that growth can be directly linked to the development of national partnerships called Money Smart Week Champions. These high level partnerships have provided growth in scale each year and have the potential to compound that progress in the future as more alliances are formed. Using a top-down approach, national champions can effectively reach hundreds, sometimes thousands of constituents or members and encourage them to join the effort at the local level. Additionally, these groups are able to engage the public and amplify the Money Smart Week messages of awareness, education and access to resources.
