The Board of Fire and Police Commissioners has identified the following key issues, challenges and opportunities that will require the attention, expertise and leadership of the new Chief of Police. Annual salary range is within $110,689 to $154,961.

Incidents of police misconduct have been addressed by implementation of psychological testing for candidates, an increase in in-service training for officers, and the acquisition of an Early Intervention System (EIP) to identify MPD employees who show symptoms of job stress, training deficiencies or personal problems that affect job performance. While delays have slowed the implementation of this computer based software, the need for confidence building measures to increase trust between the police department and the community remains ongoing. Use of force issues and police misconduct will require constant vigilance as well as a commitment by an incoming Chief to be a presence in this diverse urban metropolis. With the realization that no city is immune from the realities of racial polarization, Milwaukee’s next Chief of Police will need to build bridges between the department and a citizenry sometimes disaffected by interactions between officers and residents.
Milwaukee’s emergence from the era where an industrialized base provided family-supporting jobs for generations of citizens has brought new challenges, not the least of which is crime, borne to some degree, by poverty and unemployment. Like most major American cities, economic development is the cornerstone of efforts to build job opportunities. Criminal activity can impede progress. A new Chief will need to be innovative in developing crime prevention and crime solving strategies that will contribute to the safety of the city.

Funding of essential public safety services under the unrelenting pressure of tightening municipal budgets confronts major cities annually. Milwaukee is no exception. Police overtime is an ongoing concern for policy-makers and police personnel. Consequently, management of limited resources must be foremost in the mind of the city’s next Chief of Police while, at the same time, aggressive pursuit of both government and private grant funding will need to be continued.

Calls for service are increasing with the expectation from citizens that response time will improve accordingly. Police district boundary lines are being reviewed, outside consultants have been retained to conduct staffing studies, and deployment of police resources to meet demands in a priority-based system are under constant review. Computerization has been a persistent problem and calls for civilianization of the MPD computer operation are being heard. Strong leadership and a commitment to excellence by the next Chief will be needed to meet these challenges and others facing the largest police department in the State of Wisconsin.
