From early childhood education to post-secondary and workforce opportunities, the increased access to quality educational systems holds long-term economic and civic benefits for all students and families across Arizona. It is important policymakers are familiar with innovative and successful policies and practices that can drive change in their local communities as they advocate for quality educational services.

This two-day convening provided participants with an overview of Arizona’s educational policies and academic outcomes for families and students across early childhood education, K-12, and post-secondary education. Participants had an opportunity to engage in conversations about the role stakeholders and policymakers can play across the entire educational pipeline to strengthen the access and quality of systems to support a stronger workforce across the state.

This convening is part of the NALEO Education Leadership Initiative (NELI) which aims to provide Latino public servants with the enhanced capacity and governance skills they need to become effective advocates for their students, families, and communities. Participants who attended this two-day convening heard from leading experts from the public, private, and non-profit sectors who tackled pressing education topics in an institute that included the following curriculum:

- The Arizona We Want, Cultivating the Civic Engagement We Need
- Foundations of Early Childhood Education
- Serving the Needs of Diverse Families - Tackling Toxic Stress
- Addressing Arizona’s Educator Shortage: Strategies to Ensure They Come and are Supported to Teach
- Beyond Math, Reading, and Writing: Preparing Students and Families with the Skills for Post-Secondary Success
- Barriers to College Completion: Addressing Developmental Education
- Developing Strategies for Post-Secondary and Workforce Partnerships

The policy institute convened state legislators, local policymakers, national and state experts, private sector representatives and other key stakeholders. Institute participants had an opportunity to engage with national, regional and education experts who helped deepen their understanding of the most pressing education policy issues facing the state. Policymakers received timely information, learned best practices, exchanged policy ideas, strengthened governance skills to support effective leadership, and also had the opportunity to network with colleagues and experts from throughout the state.

9:30 – 10:00 a.m.  Session I - The Arizona We Want, Cultivating the Civic Engagement We Need
Abbey South, 1st Floor

Latinos comprise 31% of the population in Arizona and ensuring their political, economic, and educational success is critical to the future prosperity of the state. By 2020, 68% of all jobs in Arizona will require a postsecondary degree. In order to meet the economic and civic needs of the state, every child and student needs access to quality educational services and systems. Education has the power to serve as that vehicle that can mobilize and engage communities. This session provided an overview of key indicators across the state that highlight policies and practices that can enhance the long-term opportunities for Latinos and all of Arizona.

Chair: Hon. Steve M. Gallardo, Supervisor, Maricopa County, Arizona; Former Board Member, NALEO

• Ms. Darcy Renfro, Senior Director, The Arizona We Want,
Center for the Future of Arizona
10:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.
Session II - Foundations of Early Childhood Education
Abbey South, 1st Floor

There is growing research demonstrating the short and long-term benefits of early childhood education for children, families, and communities. Evidence shows that a child’s brain has the greatest potential to grow by the age of three and it is in these first three years of life that children’s brains must be exposed to quality interactions to stimulate and strengthen brain development, an important precursor of school readiness. This session provided an overview of brain development research and also highlighted the importance of utilizing practices that are responsive to diverse families and that support key cognitive and emotional functions in young children.

- Dr. Sarah R. Lytle, Director of Outreach and Education, Institute for Learning & Brain Sciences, University of Washington

Session III - Serving the Needs of Diverse Families - Tackling Toxic Stress
Abbey South, 1st Floor

Infants exposed to healthy and nurturing environments develop the foundation needed for positive brain development and school readiness. Exposure to factors such as poverty, abuse, neglect, and family separation can trigger the development of toxic stress in young children and can have lasting emotional, social, and cognitive effects. Recognizing the limitations of a child’s environment is important, but strides can be made when the strengths their families and communities hold are uplifted to tackle the factors associated with toxic stress. This session provided an overview of the research on toxic stress and ways in which policymakers can develop policies to support healthy environments to mitigate these factors while strengthening family, community, and cultural connections.

9:00 – 10:30 a.m.  Session IV – Addressing Arizona’s Educator Shortage: Strategies to Ensure They Come and are Supported to Teach
Abbey South, 1st Floor

In order to ensure students have access to rigorous and enriching curriculum, the educator workforce must be fully prepared and supported to provide those opportunities in every classroom across the state. According to the Arizona Department of Education, in 2014, nearly 75% of district and charter schools in about 80 districts reported one to five educator vacancies. Educators need opportunities for on-going professional development and support systems to become effective practitioners. This session highlighted policies and strategies that can be strengthened to better recruit, retain, and diversify the educator workforce.

•  Ms. Roberta Furger, Director of Communication Outreach, Senior Writer, Learning Policy Institute
•  Dr. Ramona Mellott, Dean, College of Education, Northern Arizona University
•  Dr. David Garcia, Associate Professor, Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College, Arizona State University

10:30 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.  Session V – Beyond Math, Reading, and Writing: Preparing Students and Families with the Skills for Post-Secondary Success
Abbey South, 1st Floor

Exposure to rigorous curriculum and enriching opportunities in K-12, combined with the successful use of formal and informal educational networks, can strengthen the academic prospects of students. To be ready for a post-secondary education and to successfully navigate an academic setting it is critical that students in K-12 internalize the importance of soft skills like relationship building, mastering studying skills and time management as well as participating in extracurricular and internship activities. Understanding the benefits that come from their engagement in these types of practices can help promote the social capital and mobility of students, while better preparing them to compete and succeed in their future life and careers. In this session, policymakers learned about best practices and model partnerships spanning K-12, higher education, and workforce initiatives that can successfully equip students and families for post-secondary success.

1:00 – 2:30 p.m.  Session VI - Barriers to College Completion: Addressing Developmental Education
Abbey South, 1st Floor

Nationally, Latino students are graduating from high school at the highest rates seen in years, yet they are graduating underprepared to enroll in college credit bearing courses once they enter post-secondary institutions. As reported by the National Conference of State Legislatures, over 41% of Latino students graduating from high school nationwide require a certain amount of developmental education, costing $2.3 billion dollars in spending each year. Although developmental courses are designed to help students reach college-level preparedness, oftentimes they become a barrier to college completion. This session provided policymakers with a deeper understanding of effective institutional policies and practices that accelerate students’ completion of developmental courses that can lead them to pursue their goal of obtaining a college degree.

Chair:  Hon. Elizabeth C. Archuleta, Supervisor, Coconino County, Arizona; Board Member, NALEO

2:45 – 4:15 p.m.  Session VII - Developing Strategies for Post-Secondary and Workforce Partnerships
Abbey South, 1st Floor

According to the Center on Education and Workforce at Georgetown University, 55 million job openings will be available in the U.S. economy and 30% will require some type of postsecondary degree by 2020. In order to meet current and projected workforce demands, students must have access to opportunities that will facilitate the completion of a postsecondary degree. Market sector and workforce partnerships hold the potential to increase students’ knowledge, skills, and competencies needed for long-term career progression. This session focused on demonstrating the importance of developing policies and creating cross-sector partnerships to better align post-secondary institutions to meet the current and future workforce needs of Arizona.
