

Presenter Bios

Emily Wicks-Day

President, NWPC-WA

Owner & Founder, Bossy at the Core

Emily Wicks is a skilled planner, researcher, manager, and communicator. Her unique combination of public relations, community engagement, legislative, policy, government, and political experience helps her clients develop and execute strategies to achieve their goals.

A Washington native, Emily began her career at Gallatin Public Affairs in 2008 and went on to work as a deputy finance director for the successful campaign to elect Washington Governor Jay Inslee.

She also served as a legislative aide to then State Rep. and current Washington Lieutenant Governor Cyrus Habib, and as the communications and community relations coordinator for the Marysville School District. There she worked with staff, students, families, and the community to support district goals and build a positive community presence. Emily founded BOSSY LLC with the goal of creating "Bossy at the Core", a co-working, retail and membership organization designed for women and working professionals.

Emily is a graduate of Washington State University with bachelor's degrees in political science and public relations. She is dedicated to ensuring women have equal political representation and serves as President of the National Women's Political Caucus of Washington, a multi-partisan organization dedicated to recruiting, training and electing women to public office. She is also on the board of the Marysville YMCA and the Marysville School District Foundation. Emily lives in Everett with her partner James "Bubba" Day and loves political strategy, her high school alma mater Marysville Pilchuck, Mariner's baseball, the Cougs, and the beautiful Pacific Northwest