Nichole Webber

Executive Project Coordinator, City of Everett

Nichole was born and raised in rural Washington. She received an AA from Peirce Community College where she played basketball and went on to earn a B.A. in communications at Eastern Washington University. Her vocational training began in telemarketing, direct sales, and volunteering for various political races picking up the basics of campaign management 101 along the way. Nichole put these foundational skills into practice managing the successful campaigns for State Senator Michael Baumgartner an Everett Council Race and Everett's current Mayor, Cassie Franklin.

Nichole says The foundations of successful campaigning are invaluable in other arenas as well, such as in her current role as the Executive Project Coordinator for the City of Everett, her former role as Executive Assistant to the CEO for Cocoon House, a non-profit providing housing for homeless and at-risk young people and their children. Nichole's focus on and off the campaign trail is not necessarily political affiliation, but good people and causes that benefit Washingtonians and their families.
