Analysis of employer identifications in 1999-2000 Campaign Finance Reports June 11, 2001

In 1995 the Ohio legislature passed campaign finance reform legislation limiting campaign contributions and requiring certain types of financial disclosure. One type of disclosure required was employer identification of certain contributors.

Statewide and Ohio General Assembly candidates are required to disclose the employer of contributors who gave more than $100. Candidates are required to make a "Best Effort" to obtain this information. People making contributions are also required by law to provide this employer identification to the candidates. This study examines candidates' record of compliance with the employer identification requirement in the law.

Section 3517.10 (B)(4) of the Ohio Revised Codes requires that a statement of contributions received shall include -

"(ii) If a campaign committee of a statewide candidate or candidate for the office of member of the general assembly receives a contribution from an individual that exceeds one hundred dollars, the name of the individual's current employer, if any, or, if the individual is self-employed, his occupation;"

Section 3517.10(E)(2) of the Ohio Revised Code states the following:

"Any individual who makes a contribution that exceeds one hundred dollars to a campaign committee of a statewide candidate or candidate for the office of member of the general assembly shall provide the name of the individual's current employer, if any, or, if the individual is self-employed, the individual's occupation to the recipient of the contribution at the time the contribution is made."

The law requires that the name of the employer be provided and disclosed if the person is employed by another. If self-employed, the occupation of the individual may be disclosed.

Ohio law established the listing of "Best Efforts" if a candidate could not provide the employer of a contributor. The Ohio Secretary of State developed standards in rules to define "Best Efforts." As a result candidates who use "Best Efforts" must include notices requesting employer identifications in campaign solicitation materials and make one follow-up attempt to obtain the employer identification. In this report, candidates were given credit for employer identification where the employer was provided. Listing "Best Efforts" was not counted as providing the employer identification.

Approximately 30 candidates did not supply the employer for in-kind contributions from individuals who gave more than $100. Employer identification has been legally required for in-kind contributions since 1995, however the Secretary of State's forms did not include a space for this information until April 1999. In April of 1999 the Ohio Secretary of State's updated forms were released and included a space for the employer. In November 1999 and January 2000 the Secretary of State inadvertently continued to distribute the old outdated forms and candidate training seminars. In-kind contributions reported on forms submitted throughout 1999-2000 should have contained the employer identification for in-kind contributions of more than $100 from individuals.

A number of candidates use generic identification of employer/occupation that do not provide voters with the actual name of the business or employer. For instance generic listings included "Attorney" instead of the name of a law firm, "Developer" instead of the name of the company, and "Manager" instead of the company name. Candidates should provide the name of the employer whenever an individual contributor is not self-employed.

This study is based on the 1999-2000 candidate campaign finance reports computerized by the Ohio Secretary of State. It includes 1999-2000 reports and addenda for all statewide candidates and legislative candidates submitted to the Secretary of State before March 31, 2001.

As a courtesy to candidates, a copy of their individual analysis was sent to them in June 2001, so that they could verify its accuracy. Corrections were made in this final report based on appropriate feedback from candidates and their staffs.

Major Findings

In 1995 the Ohio legislature passed campaign finance reform legislation limiting campaign contributions and requiring certain types of financial disclosure. Key to the new public disclosure was a provision requiring that candidates report the employer identification for individual contributors who gave more than $100. Public disclosure of the employer of a contributor enables the public to examine the economic interests supporting candidates. With this information voters have another tool to evaluate how candidates might be persuaded to vote on key issues.

1. Ohio candidates continue to improve in disclosure.

In 1999 and 2000, Ohio statewide and legislative candidates received approximately 38 million dollars in contributions, 13.3 million from individuals who gave more than $100. Statewide and legislative candidates identified the employers of 12.3 million, 92 percent of the amount of individual contributions of more than $100 (excluding in-kind contributions), down from 95 percent in 1998 and equal to 92 percent in 1997.

2. Most top government officials and candidates for statewide office disclosed 90 percent or more.

Top government officials and candidates running for statewide office set an excellent example of disclosure, most identifying 90 percent or more of the employers of their large contributors.

3. Statewide and legislative officeholders and candidates who ran in the 2000 general election who identified more than 90 percent.

5. Statewide and legislative officeholders and candidates who ran in the 2000 general election who identified less than 90 percent.

PLEASE NOTE: Some candidates had few contributions more than $100. By failing to identify 1 or 2 contributors, some received an "F". Obviously it is more important to focus attention on candidates who failed to identify many contributors.

NA - Candidate

6. Unknown contributors are known to other candidates.

Some candidates failed to identify well-known contributors. An analysis of several large contributions found that some candidates appear to overlook employer identifications other candidates were able to find. Candidates need to make employer identification a priority for staff handling these reports.

7. Campaign finance data entry and reporting problems

Data entry problems reduced the completeness and accuracy of the Ohio Secretary of State's campaign contribution database:

- The data entry firm used by the Ohio Secretary of State -
- Failed to data enter employer names provided by candidates in the reports from Ken Blackwell, Richard Finan, Larry Householder, Doug White and others.*
- Made duplicate data entries for identical contributions in the reports from Richard Finan, Alice Resnick, Ed Boyle.
- Entered incorrect amounts in the reports from Jim Trakas, Nancy Hollister, Tim Ryan, Keith Faber.
- Did not enter names of political action committees in the report from Jim Trakas.
  - A candidate that filed electronically did not follow all of the field descriptions, inappropriately listing company names in the individual last name field (Jim Petro).
  - The Ohio Secretary of State's office distributed outdated in-kind contribution forms at candidate campaign finance seminars in November 1999 and January 2000. These outdated forms used by many candidates did not include a space for the employer for in-kind contributions.
- * These problems arose from data entry by the state's contractor. The errors were not in the paper reports made by candidates' campaigns.

Ohio Secretary of State Blackwell and his staff worked this year to replace Ohio's campaign finance system and begin accepting electronic filings. Enhanced auditing procedures and higher data entry standards could alleviate problems. In addition as more candidates file electronically many data entry problems could be eliminated.

When the Center first calculated candidate compliance with disclosure requirements, these data entry errors created the appearance that many candidates, including the Ohio Secretary of State Ken Blackwell, did a poor or failing job following disclosure laws (In the chart below see original grade) than the candidates actually did (See grade after corrections made by Citizens Policy Center).

The Ohio Secretary of State's office (SOS) is to be commended for steps taken in the last year to upgrade their data entry process. However, as this evidence shows, more improvements are needed.

8. Candidates who failed to provide employer identification of in-kind contributors

The 1995 campaign finance reform law required that candidates provide the employer of individuals who contribute more than $100, including those who make in-kind contributions. Updated forms requesting legally required information for in-kind contributions were printed and released in April 1999. However old forms (not requesting the employer identification) were distributed in November of 1999 and January 2000 at Ohio Secretary of State candidate campaign seminars.

Approximately 30 candidates used outdated in-kind contribution forms, including Governor Bob Taft, Chief Justice Thomas Moyer, and Representatives David Goodman, Larry Householder, Jim Trakas and Chris Verich. Therefore, we have adjusted the grade for candidates who failed to provide the employer for in-kind contributions, giving them credit as if they had properly disclosed the employer. This is the second report that required an adjustment for in-kind contribution grades, due to outdated forms provided to candidates. We will not adjust grades on this basis in the future. Candidates must realize that the employer identification requirements cover all types of contributions from individuals.

The following candidates grades were originally low because of their failure to provide employer identifications for in-kind contributors. Their adjusted grades are listed after the Center exempted in-kind contributions from the analysis.

Candidates who failed to provide employer identification of in-kind contributors

* NA indicates the candidate had no individual contributions of more than $100 that were not inkind contributions.

9. Generic employer information

Generic data entries refer to identification of employer/occupation that do not provide voters with the actual name of the business or employer. For instance generic listings included "Professor" in the employer field instead of the name of the university, "Attorney" instead of the name of a law firm, "Developer" instead of the name of the company, and "Manager" instead of the company name.

10. Responses from candidates

The following are examples of a variety of concerns and questions raised by candidates.

Recommendations

I. Statewide and legislative candidates and legislators should -

- A) Provide employer identifications for all forms of contributions from individuals, including in-kind contributions.
  - B) File campaign finance reports electronically as soon as is possible for each campaign.
  - C) Support efforts to require more candidates to file electronically.

II. The Ohio Secretary of State should -

- A) Create an auditing procedure for data entry work that screens for duplicate entries, correct numbers, and failure to data enter employer identifications or company names.
- B) Offer more intensive training to new candidates, many of whom are unaware of disclosure requirements. All of the candidates in 1999-2000 who received an F grade, except one, were new or appointed candidates.
  - C) Distribute only updated campaign finance forms.
  - D) Review electronically filed data to confirm that data is entered into appropriate fields.
- E) Auditors should reject employer identifications such as "professor," "nurse" and "administrative assistant" that do not provide the employer of people who are not self-employed.

The Citizens Policy Center thanks the Joyce Foundation and the George Gund Foundation for their support of this project to document compliance with employer identification disclosure requirements in Ohio. The findings and opinions expressed in this report are those of the Citizens Policy Center.

The Citizens Policy Center, a not-for-profit tax-exempt organization, is the research and public education affiliate of Ohio Citizen Action. The Center was founded in Cleveland in 1976 to conduct research and public education about issues affecting industrial states, recognizing that the industrial states were going through economic changes that would make obsolete much of the conventional wisdom about state and local public policy.

The Center thanks the Secretary of State's staff for their kind assistance during the review of paper filings. Curt Mayhew, Rose Givens and Kelly Neer were particularly helpful. The Center thanks Professor John Green, director of the Ray C. Bliss Institute of Applied Politics at the University of Akron for his critique and comments.

Laura Yeomans is the research director of the Citizens Policy Center. She is the author of this report. Patty Wise is the research department database manager. Catherine Turcer and Brandi Whetstone conducted much of the research at the Ohio Secretary of State's office verifying the accuracy of data.
