

Save Marrickville

The NSW Liberal Government wants to rezone Marrickville heartland for high-rise development - at least 6,000 new dwellings with no new schools, parks, roads or hospitals.

And developers want even more land for high-rise. Mirvac want to knock down factories to build apartments up to 35 storeys! And many more high-rise projects are planned.

But there is still time - rezoning for this development has NOT been approved!

What could be lost on Carrington Road?

- 1,800 jobs
- The historic General Motors-Holden Australia factory that is National Trust listed
- Workspaces rented by artists and small businesses

We can stop this!

Save Marrickville are your local champions, fighting for better outcomes for our community, the environment and the people who live and work here. We love living here, too.

Save Marrickville will not accept the destruction of our neighbourhood. We want:

- sympathetic development and density
- local council and community control of planning
- preservation of heritage and local character
- preservation of industrial lands and employment
- planned infrastructure first: schools, parks, roads, affordable housing and parking.

We have already:

- forced Mirvac to re-think its plans - but they are still committed to developing Carrington Road
- gained public commitments of support from our Inner West Council Mayor, state member Jo Haylen, federal members Anthony Albanese and Linda Burney
- argued for a better deal for our area from NSW Planning and Environment and the Greater Sydney Commission

What can you do? Join our fight, have your say!

You could also talk to your neighbours. Our diverse culture is worth fighting for. We want a good neighbourhood for everyone that lives here and proper infrastructure to welcome new residents.
