

Anna Stewart Memorial Project

MONDAY 15 - FRIDAY 19 AUGUST 2016

The Anna Stewart Project is a fitting memorial to a former active Victorian union official who died tragically in 1983, aged 35. Her involvement with the union movement began at a time when women workers were poorly paid, lacked job security and skills recognition. Disappointingly in 2016 women are still fearful of job insecurity, are paid poor wages and are still under-represented in decision making structures.

What's this Project About?

- The aim of this project is to encourage women's participation in unions.
- To promote a greater awareness of the particular needs of female union members and the important contributions women can make to the development and growth of their union.
- To facilitate a greater understanding of the industrial issues confronting women in both blue and white collar occupations.
- To develop participants awareness of the ways in which women can work together to end the discrimination and exploitation of women workers in Australia.

During the week women from diverse workplaces and occupations spend time together discussing work and issues that affect union women. While there is no charge for attending the course, participants do need to apply through their union for paid leave to attend or other arrangements with your employer.

As this will be the 30th Year WA has been involved in this project, there will be a special celebration to commemorate the anniversary.
