

Michelle Miller

Michelle Miller is a grief blogger, has essays featured on TheRumpus.net and OurSideofSuicide.com, and is the author of, Boys, Booze, and Bathroom Floors: Forty-Six Tales about the Collision of Suicide Grief and Dating. Her memoir chronicles the aftermath of her husband's infidelities and suicide in 2014 at the age of thirty-one, and how she used dating to run from, and simultaneously into her grief.

Prior to her husband's death, Michelle worked full time with special needs students in a small town while balancing life with two young children and a volatile marriage. Her approach to grief is one of extreme empathy, humor, blunt honesty, and...okay, a few cocktails along the way.

Michelle is currently living with her best friend, and their five children in San Diego, California. She is working on her second book, Ghetto Grief which is a collection of short stories about the unconventional ways in which she grieved and continues to grieve her husband; set to be released in 2017.

For links to follow her on social media, view her blog, purchase her book, or read her published essays, visit: MouthyMichellesMusings.com