Lisa C. Greene, M.A., CFLE is a professional parenting educator and coach since 2004. As an international public speaker, author of several books and resources, and mom of two teenagers with special healthcare needs, Lisa focuses on family resiliency, transition-readiness, medical adherence and parenting.

With the unexpected loss of her husband in April, 2015, Lisa has walked through another aspect of parenting that most families don't face: widowed parenting. She has taken what she has learned in her prior work with families coping with grief, trauma and loss due to childhood illness and adapted it for families coping with the loss of a parent.

Lisa holds a master's degree in Family Life Education from Concordia University, St. Paul and has met the stringent requirements for full certification by the National Council on Family Relations as a Certified Family Life Educator (CFLE). She is also an adjunct professor for the Department of Social and Behavioral Sciences at Concordia University.

Lisa lives with her children in the beautiful Seattle, WA area. She enjoys family time, travel, adventures, reading, the outdoors, writing, and the Seattle Seahawks. Connect with Lisa at www.HappyHeartFamilies.com.
