

44 Million Reasons to Defend America's Pensions

The latest attempt by bankers, bondholders and lawmakers to break into American workers' pension funds represents an attempted robbery of epic proportions.

More than 44 million American workers faithfully contributed part of their paychecks every week into U.S. pension funds based on the promise that they would have a measure of financial security at the end of long, hard and often dangerous careers.

Those pension funds are now being targeted by the same interest groups whose actions ravaged the nation's economy and drained trillions from home equity and 401(k) savings accounts while using massive taxpayer bailout funds to pad executive bonuses.

This nation's pension system is not broken, busted or in need of a radical overhaul that shifts ever more wealth from the nation's middle class to the top one percent. Responsible lawmakers and citizens must demand that America keep its pension promises to workers who expect and deserve nothing less.
