

Laura Mitchell

Community & Participation Specialist

"I'm passionate about empowering Traditional Owner's to develop projects that help look after country and culture. I enjoy bringing people together, camping on-country and holding a space for everyone to listen to each other's aspirations".

Based in Adelaide, Laura has extensive experience working with communities and stakeholders to establish and support Aboriginal ranger groups in the Northern Territory and South Australia. She is an experienced healthy country planning facilitator and worked alongside multiple land councils to support the development and implementation of plans.

Laura has worked in joint management, indigenous protected area management, workshop facilitation, indigenous capacity building and training and supporting women's law and culture projects throughout the desert region.

Laura specialises in:

developing, operating and managing Indigenous Ranger groups | delivering effective & efficient program management | building and maintaining relationships | innovative integration of Indigenous knowledge and western science in management and monitoring of country | cooperative management of protected areas | managing Open Standards and Healthy Country Planning projects | identifying funding opportunities | funding application preparation and support
