

Is Zara profiting off sweatshop abuse in Cambodia?

In Cambodia, the people who sew clothes for H&M, The Gap, and other major brands struggle to make ends meet with a legal minimum wage of $100 per month.

Thousands of workers have fainted at their sewing machines owing to malnutrition, overwork, heat, poor ventilation, and fumes from chemicals.

When over 200,000 workers stood up to demand a fairer wage, authorities shot four workers dead in the streets and threw 23 union activists in jail.

Consumers don't want clothes tainted with exploitation and repression.

On September 17th, garments workers in Cambodia are demonstrating at their workplaces for a raise to $177 per month – the minimum needed to cover basic needs according to a government-appointed task force.

Is Zara profiting off sweatshop abuse in Cambodia?

In Cambodia, the people who sew clothes for H&M, The Gap, and other major brands struggle to make ends meet with a legal minimum wage of $100 per month.

Thousands of workers have fainted at their sewing machines owing to malnutrition, overwork, heat, poor ventilation, and fumes from chemicals.

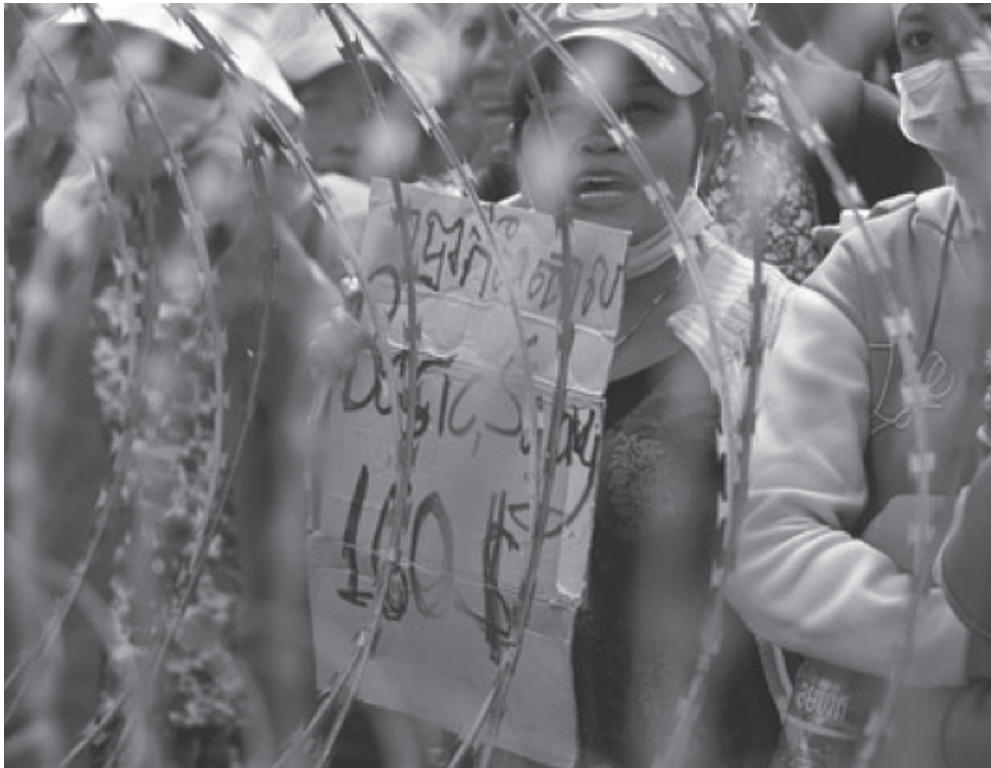

When over 200,000 workers stood up to demand a fairer wage, authorities shot four workers dead in the streets and threw 23 union activists in jail.

Consumers don't want clothes tainted with exploitation and repression.

On September 17th, garments workers in Cambodia are demonstrating at their workplaces for a raise to $177 per month – the minimum needed to cover basic needs according to a government-appointed task force.

Tell the store manager at a Zara near you that you support the workers' demands:

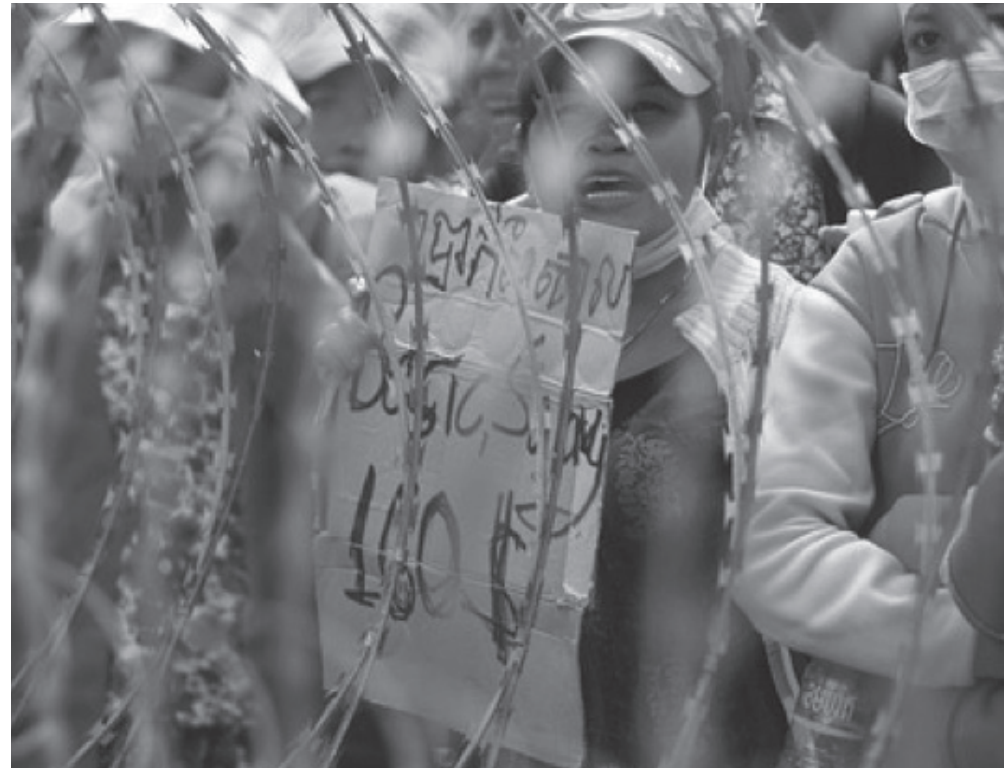

1. Negotiate directly with Cambodian unions over wages,
2. Mandate an increased base wage of $177 per month at their supplier factories,
3. Reflect this increase in prices paid to the suppliers, and
4. Make a long-term commitment to sourcing from Cambodia in factories where labor rights are respected.

For more info: www.union-league.org/cambodia177

Tell the store manager at a Zara near you that you support the workers' demands:

1. Negotiate directly with Cambodian unions over wages,
2. Mandate an increased base wage of $177 per month at their supplier factories,
3. Reflect this increase in prices paid to the suppliers, and
4. Make a long-term commitment to sourcing from Cambodia in factories where labor rights are respected.

For more info: www.union-league.org/cambodia177