Women’s Refuges – The Facts

The NSW Government has adopted a new approach for specialist homelessness services (SHS). Services have been designed to support women (with or without children) who are homeless or at risk of homelessness by achieving a better balance between prevention, early intervention and crisis support.

This fact sheet provides a summary of the status of women’s refuges in NSW before and after these reforms.

Impact on women’s refuges

All women’s refuges owned by the NSW Government continue to operate. A network of women’s only refuges has been maintained to ensure women leaving violence have access to safe accommodation. Women, including those escaping domestic and family violence, are able to access discrete specialist services and refuges run by the providers of new services.

Before the reforms, there were 63 NSW Government-owned crisis properties used as women's refuges. In the new service system, these crisis properties remain targeted at women only, with or without children. There is also one additional women’s refuge in Western Sydney.

The list on the following pages identifies the status of each refuge that existed prior to the reforms and identifies which service package and provider it is now managed under.

In addition, the government-owned property portfolio has increased through the establishment of two new housing companies, with a specialised focus on housing solutions for young people and women with children experiencing domestic and family violence.

Some non-government providers also operate their own properties as refuges using support funding under their SHS service packages. These are also listed below.
