

Our librarians are very special people, oftentimes overlooked and not truly appreciated for what they do for their students at their local schools. Librarians provide so much to adults, teens, and children, giving a great experience and good time for a person to have self time and lose themselves in a learning experience through books and or computers which any library provides. Librarians are always there to help and answer any questions to help provide a better experience for the library's guest and I feel librarians work hard even though they aren't that looked on but they are always working on their computers or on books that need to be places. They should be appreciated because of the amount of time in work they put into their job, also because of the regulations in the job they have worked hard in to help keep in check. Librarians know the value of reading for fun. Librarians are also useful because the Librarians Guide and Advise Teachers and Staff. My personal librarian that works in my school is Ms.Barbara she allowed the Peer forward leaders and debate team to meet in the library to practice and schedule our school activities and she would oftentimes come in to tell us of new opportunities available in and out of our school Luke C Moore. When I first met her I'd come to the library when I was anxious and she and her library welcomed me, she also would give me advice when I'd tell her situations and motivate me to work harder and have a positive mindset with my actions, she also is available to the students making time for any students that may need help with anything offering knowledge from sources she a librarian knows of to help anyone in need of help. I feel librarians have a lot of resources and many things to offer and should be celebrated for their dedication to their job, and guests whether they work in a public library or a school library because of what they have provided since the start and still can give to the guest.
